Vote extends abortion rules

Washington (AP) — The Senate voted 56 to 39 Wednesday night to broaden the conditions under which the federal government will pay for abortions for poor women.

Besides cases where a woman's life would be endangered by a full-term pregnancy, the Senate said federally-funded abortions should be allowed "where medically necessary or for the treatment of rape or incest."

The vote came on the same day that the Supreme Court returned to a lower court the case challenging a restriction on abortion funding that Congress approved in 1976.

A New York federal court judge stayed the restriction, saying it was an unconstitutional infringement on the rights of poor women. The high court said the judge should take another look at his ruling in light of a decision last week saying states have discretion in deciding whether to pay for Medicaid abortions.

The new conditions were written into a $60.7 billion appropriations bill for the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

The vote was on an amendment by Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., to accept those restrictions instead of a set drafted by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Earlier Wednesday, the Senate voted 56 to 42 against a proposal by Rep. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., that would have deleted all restrictions on abortions, including the committee language.

The committee had agreed that abortions should be paid for where a woman's life was at stake, in cases of rape, incest, ectopic pregnancy, kidney disease, multiple sclerosis or where a fetus was likely to suffer deformity or debilitation because of disease.

(Nebraska Sens. Carl Curtis, Republican, and Edward Zorinsky, Democrat, voted against the Brooke and Packwood amendments.)

Brooke maintained that his amendment would cover serious ailments that the committee's language failed to include.

An attempt by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N. M., to weaken the Brooke amendment failed 58 to 36. Domenici, who favored strict limits on abortion funding, claimed that Brooke's reference to medical necessity was vague and "we don't know what that means.

"He would say trust the doctor. I assume that all the abortions they have been performing were medically necessary," Domenici argued.

The vote on Brooke's amendment places the Senate in conflict with the House over the abortion question for the second straight year. The House voted earlier this month to bar federally funded abortions under any conditions.

The vote came on the same day that the Supreme Court returned to a lower court a case challenging a restriction on abortion funding that Congress approved in 1976.

This restriction, known as the Hyde amendment, said abortions under such federal programs as Medicaid should be paid for only when a woman's life would be in jeopardy because of a full-term pregnancy.

A New York federal court judge stayed the restriction, saying it was an unconstitutional infringement on the rights of poor women.

Packwood argued that Congress should adopt the Supreme Court's view and leave abortion as a question to be resolved between a woman and her physician. To deny poor women abortions because the practice is thought immoral is "a disdainful, haughty arrogance that should demean this Congress," he said.

"It is not the business of government to put its particular stamp of morality on abortion," he said.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., advanced the argument that abortion is a means of population control, a field in which the United States has traditionally taken the lead.

"As the rest of the world is catching up with our leadership in this area, suddenly we become regressive, we become emotional," he said.

But Helms described abortion as "the deliberate termination of an innocent human life." He warned that it could lead "to disposing of other socially or politically undesirable" persons.

The Supreme Court decision had no direct impact on the Hyde amendment, which still cannot be enforced for the time being. The appropriations bill to which it was attached expires Sept. 30.

York youth found guilty

By Michael Holmes
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

York — Seventeen-year-old Ricky A. Johnson was found guilty of second degree murder Wednesday night by an eight-woman, four-man jury.

The York High School junior was convicted in the April 22 rifle slaying of York policeman James M. Richardson II, 24, who was answering a disturbance call at the Johnson family home.

The jury returned the verdict at 9:58 p.m.

Johnson showed no emotion as the verdict was read, slowly chewing gum as he sat with his attorneys.

The courtroom had been filled to near its 70-person capacity Wednesday morning during final arguments. As the verdict was read at 10:10 p.m., however, only Johnson's parents, reporters and a single spectator observed.

Richardson, an ex-Marine, had served with the York police force for 10 months before his death. His death apparently was the first time a York law enforcement officer had ever been slain in the line of duty.

The shooting occurred about 10:35 p.m., on the front lawn of the Arbor Drive Baptist Church, across the street from the Johnson home.

The officer was shot once with a .22 caliber, hollow point bullet that pierced his chest a fraction of an inch above his bulletproof vest.

During the eight-day trial, witnesses testified that the slaying occurred after Johnson quarreled with his mother, fired five shots into the front window of his home and ran toward the church yard.

The youth surrendered to authorities about an hour after the shooting and has been held without bond since.

His trial began June 20, after two attempts to have the case transferred to juvenile court. Twice the youth was ruled an adult and was convicted as such.

Conviction of second degree murder carries a sentence of 10 years to life imprisonment. District Court Judge William Norton told Johnson Wednesday night he would set a date for sentencing within 24 hours.

The youth had been charged with first degree murder. Before the jury began deliberating, however, Norton instructed them they could find the youth guilty of first degree murder, second degree murder, manslaughter or not guilty.

Mrs. June Johnson was in tears as the verdict against her son was read.

Chief defense attorney John Brogan asked that the jury be polled about the verdict.

Clerk Jeanne Yowell asked each of the 12 jurors, "Is this your verdict?"

"Yes," came the reply 12 times.

Johnson watched the jury as each juror confirmed the verdict. Again he showed no emotion.

Judge Norton told the youth, "You will be instructed when next to appear in court." Johnson nodded silently.

Asked whether an appeal of the conviction is being considered, Brogan declined comment.

During closing arguments Wednesday morning, Deputy County Attorney Vince Valentino told the jury, "There is no question this case will test your courage." Valentino told of the argument between Johnson and his mother over a drink of beer Johnson gave to a 13-year-old friend of his sister.

"It wasn't just any argument," Valentino said of the quarrel in which Johnson and his mother struck one another. "It was a bad argument."

Valentino maintained that Mrs. Johnson told her son during the quarrel that she was calling the police.

The prosecutor theorized that after firing the shots into his house, Johnson crossed the street, hid behind a bus parked in the church parking lot and waited for police to arrive.

Johnson testified that he sat down, crying, behind the church building. He said he had begun to return home to make certain everything was all right, when his rifle accidentally discharged.

He testified that he did not see Richardson until the officer was lying face down on the ground.

"There's no way he (Johnson) intended to kill him," Brogan said in his summation. "I ask you, I beg you not to find this young man guilty of first degree murder or second degree murder."

Buffalo, N.Y. (UPI) — As the world turns, two college professors are asking for a grant of up to $500,000 to scrutinize TV soap operas.

Dr. Mary B. Cassata, a mass communications professor at the State University of New York at Buffalo said she and Dr. Kenneth Haun, an experimental psychologist at Monmouth College, are drafting a grant proposal to "systematically study soap operas and audience reaction to them."

"For many years people have poked fun at soap operas in terms of the acting and material the actors had to work with," Dr. Cassata explained at the edge of night. "But in actuality, some of the best acting and writing goes into each episode."

Mrs. DeMuth may be oldest Nebraskan ever.

Adams County farmwife is 111—yes, 111—today

By Dean Terrill
Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Ayr — Mrs. Sophia DeMuth will do something today which possibly no Nebraskan has ever done before. She will turn 111.

Right, 111.

For several years the Adams Countian has been accepted as the state's most senior senior. Moreover, an inch-thick Lincoln Star file of centenarians for some time back shows nobody else attaining that incredible "five score plus 10 plus one."

Apparently coming closest in the past decade at least was Mrs. Martha Aldrich of Brock, who was 109 at the time of her death eight years ago. And 1976 saw the demise of a 108-year-old, Mrs. Ida Kiplinger of Holdrege, and of 107-year-old Ada Burton of Omaha.

The Nebraska Commission on Aging keeps no such records, but one representative did think he'd heard of a male Falls Citian who is 114. "No way," said a spokesman for the Falls City Journal, "or we'd know of that guy for sure."

Living on a farm with one of her three daughters, Mrs. DeMuth has virtually lost her sight. But she is amazingly alert, hears well, has 30 years fewer wrinkles than you'd expect — and says pills are only for the ailing.

"Mama never was one to take medicine and she still isn't," said daughter Mrs. Emma Hunter of Hastings. "In fact, both the folks were pretty much abstainers in everything, except Papa did drink a little coffee."

For years Mrs. DeMuth and her late husband, Oliver, were almost legendary in this area. Two years older than his wife, he died in 1965 at age 101.

Though her family shields her from the press and other visitors now, Mrs. DeMuth has often told how Oliver came courting her by bicycle "from Hastings all the way to St. Joe." Then a newcomer from Illinois, he had met Sophia while visiting relatives in her native St. Joseph, Mo. In addition to the bike trip, he had made several visits via horse and buggy.

Another favorite recollection is Mrs. DeMuth's acquaintance with Jesse James, who grew up "about three blocks away." She well remembers when he was shot, also in St. Joe, in 1882.

Frequently in her garden until about five years ago, the centenarian-plus mostly credits her longevity to hard work. But perhaps more of a factor, according to family members, was the way she handled crises.

"If she got all keyed up about something," recalled Mrs. Hunter, "she would go out and raise hell cleaning the chicken house or something."

The couple was married in 1899 and a few years later Oliver built the still-attractive farm house, 2½ miles northeast of Ayr, which his wife continues to call home. Jennie DeMuth, another daughter, not only looks after her mother but keeps up a park-size yard of flowers.

The other children are Joe DeMuth, who farms nearby, and Mrs. Marie Fulkerson of St. Joe. The four grandchildren, all Joe's offspring, are Jerry, John and Jennie Lynn of the home and Mrs. Lewis (Joanne) Seberg of Lincoln.

"Mother was 33 before she was married," said Mrs. Hunter. "She tells us she never would have lived so long if she had been a child bride like so many girls were then."

Relations with Peking said top U.S. priority

New York (UPI) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said Wednesday the United States is committed to move toward normal relations with Peking as "a central part of our foreign policy."

In an address prepared for delivery to the Asia Society, Vance said "progress may not be easy or immediately evident," but he will pursue that commitment when he meets with Communist Chinese leaders in Peking during a five-day visit that starts Aug. 22.

"We consider friendly relations with China to be a central part of our foreign policy," he said. "China's role in maintaining world peace is vital."

In what seemed a veiled warning to the Soviet Union, which has been at bitter odds with Peking for years, Vance said, "In structuring our relationship with the Chinese, we will not enter into any agreement with others that are directed against the people's Republic of China."

The comments were part of a broad review of U.S. Asian policy in which Vance said "The United States is and will remain an Asian and Pacific power."

He made no direct mention the Republic of China on Taiwan, Peking's nationalist rival, nor of the U.S.-Taiwan defense treaty.

The people's Republic says the United States must sever relations with the Taipei government as a condition for normal Washington-Peking relations.

He noted only that the 1972 "Shanghai Communique" states that "there is but one China," and said the United States envisages peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question by the Chinese themselves.

The Shanghai Communique spelled out the guidelines for U.S.-Peoples Republic relations at the conclusion of President Richard Nixon's historic 1972 visit.

Vance said U.S. policy toward China "will continue to be guided by the principles of the Shanghai Communique, and on that basis we shall seek to move toward full normalization of relations . . .

"As we prepare to go to Peking, we recognize that progress may not be easy of immediately evident. But this administration is committed to the process, and we are approaching the talks in Peking with that in mind."

"After 25 years of confrontation, we are carrying on a constructive dialogue with the People's Republic of China," he said.

"Vast differences in culture, social systems, ideology and foreign policy still separate our two countries. But the Chinese and American people no longer face each other with the hostility, misunderstanding and virtually complete separation that existed for two decades."

Execution banned for rape

Washington (AP) — The Supreme Court banned use of the death penalty for the crime of rape Wednesday and indicated that capital punishment may be an invalid penalty for any crime but murder.

The court voted 7-2 to strike down the death penalty imposed on condemned Georgia rapist Ehrlich Anthony Coker. A majority of six justices ruled that rape may never be punished by death.

Although the decision affects only six of the 350 prisoners on death rows, it may have a profound impact on the history of capital punishment in the United States.

Had the court decided that states may impose the death penalty for crimes in which the life of the victim is not taken, its reasoning could have opened the door for future rulings that capital punishment is an appropriate penalty for such crimes as treason, espionage, hijacking, terrorism or kidnaping.

The court also set aside a federal judge's decision that cutting off federal money for abortions for poor women was unconstitutional.

The high court sent the case back to U.S. District Court Judge John Dooling in Brooklyn, N.Y., with orders that he restudy his ruling in light of the Supreme Court's June 20 decision that states are not obliged to pay for medically unnecessary abortions.

Reaction to the rape ruling was mixed but some women's groups that have been crusading for rape crisis centers and a crackdown on rapists said that severe penalties have hampered attempts to convict rapists.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, said "rape is a serious and heinous crime and should be severely punished. But the fact is that judges and juries aren't convicting." With less severe penalties, she said, NOW hopes that more rapists will be convicted.

A Chicago-based group, Women Against Rape, said "We never advocated more severe penalties. Judges are reluctant to put rapists away for what judges think are relatively minor acts. In Illinois, rape carries a 4 to 20-year sentence and this is hard to convict on."

The American Civil Liberties Union, which opposes the death penalty under any circumstances, noted that 405 of the 455 people executed for rape have been black and said that "today's decision means that this grevious example of racial prejudice may no longer flourish."

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who along with Justice William H. Rehnquist voted that the death penalty is a valid punishment for rape, said in a dissenting opinion, "The clear implication of today's holding appears to be that the death penalty may be properly imposed only as to crimes resulting in death of the victim."

The court's majority opinion was written by Justice Byron R. White, and was joined by Justices Potter Stewart, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, who oppose the death penalty for any crime, concurred.

Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. voted to overturn Coker's death sentence but said that under certain circumstances a rapist should be subject to a death sentence.

White's opinion said, "Rape is without doubt deserving of serious punishment but in terms of moral depravity and of the injury to the person and to the public, it does not compare with murder, which does involve the unjustified taking of human life."

White said the death penalty for rape is "grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime," and therefore imposes unconstitutional cruel and unusual punishment.

The court had never before struck down the death penalty as unconstitutional for a specific crime.

In 1972, the court struck down the death penalty as then applied by all states with capital punishment laws on their books. The court said the death penalty was being applied capriciously and arbitrarily — and therefore was cruel and unusual.

Many state legislatures wrote new laws. Last July 2 the court voted 7-2 in cases from Florida, Georgia and Texas that the death penalty may, under certain guidelines, be used as a punishment for murder. Brennan and Marshall dissented.

Coker was convicted of the 1974 rape of a 16-year-old Waycross, Ga., housewife. The night of the crime, Coker had escaped from a state prison where he was serving a life term for rape, kidnaping and murder.

A spokesman for Georgia's prison system said that the court's decision means Coker will be eligible for parole in seven years.

Georgia was the only state in which the crime of raping an adult woman was punishable by death. Other states, however, have laws making the rape of children under 12 years of age a capital crime.

In its last day on the bench until October, the court also sent back to lower courts, in separate 6-3 votes, school desegregation cases from Milwaukee and Omaha.

The court said those cases were to be studied again to determine if the widespread busing and other measures ordered by the lower courts was justified.

In Omaha, an order by U.S. District Judge Albert G. Schatz last school year made necessary the busing of more than 10,000 pupils.

In Milwaukee, a ruling by the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals requires by next school year the busing of nearly 9,000 pupils.

Ruling doesn't end Omaha busing

Omaha (AP) — Racial integration busing to Omaha public schools will not necessarily end because of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling Wednesday vacating a busing plan ordered by a lower court, Omaha officials and legal sources said.

A federal appellate court was instructed by the high court to reconsider its approval of an Omaha desegregation plan which required the busing of more than 10,000 students during the past school term. About 20% of the city's 60,000 school children are black.

While school board officials expressed pleasure at the court's ruling, the attorney who represented 32 black citizens who brought the suit that led to the busing order was downcast.

"It's bad news," said Robert Broom of the Omaha Legal Aid Society. "We are probably faced with a very difficult task, to reconstruct what would have been" if the school board had not taken actions that the lower court found unconstitutional in ordering the busing, Broom siad.

School Board member Don Cunningham called the ruling "wonderful" and school board attorney Kenneth Holm said, "Good."

Supt. Owen Knutzen said, "I think we have to wait and see what the 8th Circuit Court decides" when it reconsiders the Omaha case.

However, he said, the Supreme Court ruling "would indicate there was some concurrence with the arguments that the Board of Education expressed in their appeal."

What will happen to the district's integration plan this fall "is completely and totally unknown" Knutzen said.

The Omaha World-Herald quoted legal sources who said the Appeals Court would not necessarily decide against busing for Omaha when it rehears the case.

"It doesn't automatically mean that the Circuit Court of Appeals will change the integration plan," one source said. "It (the Supreme Court ruling) means that the court will review it and possibly hear legal arguments, but not necessarily."

The source said the appeals court could analyze the Dayton, Ohio, plan ruled on by the Supreme Court Monday and apply the ruling to the Omaha case; could change the guidelines for Omaha, which could mean fewer students would be bused; or could send the case back to Omaha federal district court.

Rape ruling may increase number of convictions

Hastings (AP) — Jill Fenner, coordinator for the Omaha area Rape Crisis Counseling Center, said Wednesday the Supreme Court decision banning capital punishment in adult rape cases may result in an increase in convictions for the crime.

Ms. Fenner said many juries are reluctant to convict accused rapists if the penalty is death. She said statistics show that "when the death penalty is involved" juries tend not to convict.

She added that the crisis center in Omaha and the Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women had lobbied for change in the sexual assault laws in 1975.

She said several groups requested a reduction in the maximum penalty for rape from 50 to 25 years "in order to get more convictions."

She said it is too early to tell if the reduction has indeed resulted in more convictions.

Ms. Fenner said the number of convictions is up, but that the number of arrests for sexual assault have also increased since the new penalty was enacted in late August of 1975.

Breakfast not worthy of guest

Washington (AP) — When is breakfast not breakfast?

When it's served to visitors at the White House, according to Rep. Otis G. Pike, D-N.Y.

Pike said he has been the guest of Jimmy Carter as a member of the House Ways and Means Committee and breakfast just hasn't lived up to expectations.

Anticipating a hearty meal fit for a farmer, said Pike, he ended up settling for "orange juice, coffee and a Danish. If one chooses to be boorish, one can get two Danish."

The White House doesn't rate a star for ambience either, the congressman added.

"One visualizes the crisp white linens, the sparkling crystal, the crested silverware — all of the accoutrements of gracious living."

But what one gets, Pike said, is a state dining room in which the tables have been removed to give the appearance of a lecture hall.

Rock-throwing used to slow cars

Detroit (UPI) — Residents of a Polish-Ukranian neighborhood on the city's northeast side have become so angry with speeding motorists that some have begun pelting cars with rocks.

"It works," said Patricia Chernishkin, chairman of the local block club.

Nothing else has, she said.

"I've seen people jump out in the street and scream at cars," Mrs. Chernishkin said. "But, of course, they don't listen."

The rock-throwing brigade went to work just a few weeks ago, and already the situation has improved.

"So far, we've been pretty effective," said one woman who asked not to be identified for fear of retaliation. "I would guess we've put some pretty nasty dents in quite a few cars. My husband has a good arm."

The neighborhood group has concentrated on seven intersections on two different streets — none of which has stop signs.

It has even made its own stop signs — in English and Polish — that will be erected if state highway officials don't step in first.

Mrs. Chernishkin said drivers have been using the neighborhood as a virtual racetrack for years.

"We're really afraid somebody will get killed," she said. "We have two schools right near here and lots of kids on the streets."

The rock throwing has not been officially sanctioned. Police apparently are not even aware of it.

Mrs. Chernishkin said she thinks it would be difficult for the speeders to complain.

"They'd have to say, 'Gee, I was driving down the street at 70 miles an hour and somebody threw a rock and dented my car.'

"They're committing a worse crime," Mrs. Chernishkin said. "A car can hurt somebody a lot more than a rock."

Of the rock throwers, she said, "They don't aim at the windows — they're just trying to scare them so they'll stop driving through the neighborhood and stop speeding all the time.

"It's not like everybody in the neighborhood is out there throwing rocks. But some people have gotten angry enough and done just that."

Abducted Girl Scout calls home

Sarasota, Fla. (AP) — A 15-year-old girl abducted from a Girl Scout camp early Wednesday by a man who ripped through the back of her tent telephoned her father late in the night and said she was all right and would be released soon.

The girl, Charlotte Grosse, was apparently in good condition 17 hours after her abduction, said Sheriff Jim Hardcastle.

"The father just got a telephone call from his daughter," Hardcastle said. "She said she was in Bradenton."

He said she was with a man who was "going to get rid of her at a telephone booth" where she could call home.

Bradenton is about 30 miles north of the wooded campsite in a remote state park from which Charlotte was dragged by the hair screaming into the predawn darkness.

He said that when Charlotte called, from a telephone booth, she did not sound frightened or alarmed, adding that she and her father apparently were able to improvise a hasty code.

Charlotte told her father the abductor was wearing blue jeans, sneakers and had a mustache, the sheriff said, and was driving an old blue car. Earlier, investigators had found prints from a sneaker-clad foot at the rear of the torn tent.

"She said she was all right, that he just wanted to get rid of her," said Cpl. Ray Pilon.

Charlotte, clad only in underclothes and a Mickey Mouse T-shirt, was dragged from her tent by a tall, heavy-set man about an hour before sunrise Wednesday, police said. Her sister, 14-year-old Eleanor, and another Girl Scout who shared the tent watched in horror, and Eleanor screamed: "Charlotte's been stolen!"

More than 100 searchers, their arms linked, had stepped slowly through the surrounding, sharp-pointed palmetto scrub in an intensive hunt during the day. Men with tracking dogs scouted the area while helicopters hovered overhead.

At nightfall, when no trace of Charlotte or her abductor had been found, the search was called off.

Deputies said they knew of no motive for the attack.

Earlier this month, three Girl Scouts were sexually assaulted and then murdered at a camp in Locust Grove, Okla. Authorities have charged 33-year-old prison escapee Gene Leroy Hart in the June 13 slayings and are still searching for him.

Wednesday's abduction here touched off an immediate manhunt. Law enforcement officers, volunteers, a mounted posse and Florida Power & Light Co. service trucks joined the search that was set up under the sheriff's specialized weapons and tactics unit known as SWAT.

The girl's father, Richard Grosse, a power company lineman, joined the searchers.

The park is located two miles south of the tiny town of Osprey and 12 miles south of Sarasota on U.S. 41.

The Girl Scouts were camping in an area near the northeastern border of the park just north of the main pavillion which is reached only by a narrow dirt road and is surrounded on three sides by thick scrub.

Loretta Lynn has sold motion picture rights to her autobiography, "Coal Miner's Daughter," to Universal Studios for a sum "well into the six-figure category," the country music singer's manager said Wednesday.

Amy takes summer class

Amy Carter started classes Wednesday in an "enrichment program" at George Washington University's Reading Center.

The classes are designed for bright children who "are good readers, highly motivated and have leadership qualities," the White House reported.

Newton released

Huey Newton, co-founder of the Black Panthers, was released Wednesday on $1,000 bail pending completion of an immigration hearing on whether he can be admitted to the country for a planned 10-day stay.

Newton had been held in Brampton jail since his arrival from Cuba on Saturday, when officials barred him from entering the country on grounds of moral turpitude.

Soviets invite U.N. official

Kurt Waldheim, United Nations Secretary-General, will visit the Soviet Union during the first 10 days of September, the Soviet news agency Tass reported Wednesday.

Rights campaign hailed

Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez Wednesday hailed President Carter's human rights campaign as "a great service to the Western Hemisphere."

Carter said Perez' two day visit produced "one of the most pleasant and productive meetings we have ever had."

Broadcaster new director

USIA Director John Reinhardt Wednesday announced the appointment of broadcaster R. Peter Straus as director of the Voice of America.

Straus, 54, is president of Straus Communications, Inc. He also will hold the title of assistant director of USIA.

Empress visits U.S.

Empress Farah Pahlavi left Wednesday for the United States to attend the general assembly of the Aspen Institute of Humanistic Studies in Colorado and to meet with President Carter.

London service helps tourists to scoot around

London (UPI) — With European gasoline costs escalating, moped and motorcycle hire can be an inexpensive alternative to renting a car and a good way to tour the continent.

Rent-A-Scooter Ltd. of London is offering a new package service to summer tourists. It is providing free unlimited mileage, a free safety helmet and full car club membership — plus complete ferry booking service to France, Holland and Spain — with the rental of a motorcycle or moped.

Nader plans 'Nickel Brigade' to lobby for consumer agency

Washington (UPI) — Ralph Nader asked the public Wednesday to shower nickels on Congress in an effort to save the proposed Consumer Protection Agency and threatened the unprecedented step of personally campaigning against those who oppose its creation.

"This is a battle that is not going to be lost," Nader said at a news conference.

He said his Congress Watch and the Consumer Federation of America, the nation's largest organized consumer group, will campaign in the districts of at least 78 House members who are "wavering" on the issue. They will have the backing of 90 labor and public interest groups, he said.

If the bill fails, Nader said, he will campaign before next year's elections in the districts of congressmen who are yielding to "sheer special interest power" against the agency.

Voters are being urged to send a letter to the "wavering" congressmen, along with one nickel each — the amount Nader said the proposed agency with its $15 million annual budget will cost each taxpayer per year.

The goal of the "Nickel Brigade" is to get 500 letters from each district by Aug. 1, or whenever the House takes up the bill.

Of the 78 house members on the initial list, 45% have voted for the agency in the past, 75% are Democrats and 55% are in either their first or second term in Congress. Both the House and Senate passed the bill last year but it died in conference under a veto threat from then President Gerald Ford.

This year Carter has promised to sign the legislation but support has evaporated in the House. Senate Leaders refused to call the measure up until the House has acted.

Nader contends the agency would correct the "imbalance in consumer advocacy" in Washington by lobbying for the consumer in regulatory agency decisions where heatlh, safety and pocketbook issues are concerned.

Opponents, primarily the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, see it as an unnecessary new arm of government which will further muddy the regulatory waters.

"In many ways this is a milestone for the consumer movement," said Nader, sitting in front of a fishbowl partially filled with nickels.

He said the effort is an unprecedented political intrusion which will help the consumer movement develop a grass roots structure of a type it has not had before.

He called the project the "ultimate litmus test" for next year's elections during which he might personally campaign, a political action he has never taken before.

New gonorrhea vaccine to fight 'epidemic' rate

Pittsburgh (UPI) — A new vaccine against gonorrhea — the no. 1 infectious disease of epidemic proportions — has been developed by University of Pittsburgh scientists.

Dr. Charles C. Brinton said the vaccine could reduce a person's chances of getting gonorrhea from the present rate of 30% per contact to about 1%.

The vaccine's main ingredient is a series of hairlike appendages called pili, which gonorrhea bacteria use to move themselves over moist surfaces and stick to tissues.

When the pili are injected into men and women, Brinton said, antibodies are formed that inactivate them. The antibodies confer immunity against gonorrhea.

In initial phases of the research, Brinton reported success in lab tests where he and several colleagues were injected with the venereal disease.

The vaccine will be tested on 50 to 100 persons beginning this fall. If the tests show the substance is safe and produces antibodies against gonorrhea, it will be tried on thousands of people beginning next summer, Brinton said.

After his initial success in testing humans, Brinton was going to conduct further tests on chimpanzees, believed to be the only creatures other than man to get the venereal disease.

"Until now, scientists had felt confident that chimpanzees do get gonorrhea," he said.

Brinton discovered, however, that chimpanzees don't develop gonorrhea after all. Although the gonorrhea bacteria penetrates their bodies, Britton said the chimpanzees do not develop symptoms of the disease.

Nebraska women's conference: worthy goals obscured

Women's rights advocates were ambushed in Lincoln last Sunday, giving rise to frustration and bitterness both natural to losers of an emotional battle, and understandable.

As they see it, the larger issue of justice and equality for American women was subverted by passionate advocates of much narrower causes.

As they see it, the slate of delegates elected at last weekend's Nebraska Women's Meeting does not represent the broad spectrum of thought of Nebraska women.

They are frustrated and angered by what they allege to be institutional bases of support for the anti-ERA and anti-abortion forces, and they are dismayed at the divisions among women in general and within the feminist movement in particular.

And they fear that what happened in Nebraska — the election of a 100% "pro-life, pro-family, pro-America" slate to the National Women's Conference in Houston later this year — will happen on a larger scale, resulting in policy recommendations to the President and the Congress contrary to all for which the women's movement has fought.

The feminists accurately assess the events at the Kellogg Center last weekend and their fears for the future are not without foundation.

Frankly, we are astonished at the political naivete of feminists here, many of whom knew the opposition would be organized, but who did little to effectively counteract that organization. They were out-organized, out-hustled and beaten within the letter of the law. Cries of "foul" can be ignored.

Yet they are right about the Nebraska delegation not reflecting accurately the beliefs and aspirations of all Nebraska women. For many of them, justice and equality are the overriding concerns, and rightly so.

If those concerns are not expressed in Houston, an historic opportunity will be lost.

It is hoped that fears, hatreds and prejudices will give way to a rational assessment of the status of women and concerted efforts to achieve equality and justice for women where they are denied them. But the specter of women divided does little to encourage that hope.

More judicial tampering

People opposed to busing to achieve racial balance in schools are given to complaining about "judicial tampering" and "social experimentation."

We're not wild about busing school children away from their neighborhoods, either. But we see it as a useful if last resort tool in attempting to right long-standing inequal opportunities. We also wonder about "judicial tampering" and "social experimentation."

In this case, we wonder about the U.S. Supreme Court ruling this week ordering the Eighth Circuit Court to review the busing order affecting Omaha.

The high court said the appeals court must design a remedy to redress only the racial segregation which was caused intentionally.

We thought that was covered in the relief granted earlier.

—Omaha, much of its civic leadership notwithstanding, has adapted well to the busing order and integration there seems to be proceeding as smoothly as could be expected.

Will more "judicial tampering" undo what progress has been made during this first year of the busing plan?

In this we see only the possibility of more hardship for the children. They have been the victims all along — in the segregation of schools in this country, in the efforts to desegregate them, and now in efforts to place obstacles in the path of desegregation efforts.

The court should have left well enough alone.

Why downplay differences?

The State Department is trying to minimize differences the U.S. may have with its ally, Israel. We're not entirely sure why the differences should be minimized.

The Carter administration has adopted a policy, reaffirmed this week, of proposing that Israel pull back to pre-1967 boundaries.

The policy seeks several ends: to take the wind out of the new Israeli prime minister's sails, should he prove to be the hard bargainer he is reputed to be; to inject an even American hand in the Middle East and to get peace talks off dead center. The President is said to be convinced that only through dramatic concessions can a peace agreement be struck.

So why is the State Department downplaying Israeli-U.S. differences over the policy? That will only serve to confuse the situation. It will not serve the cause of peace in the long run.

Key to recession

Marquis Childs

Washington — What passes for speech in the Senate today is, for the most part, dreary and empty. Normally perhaps only a dozen members of that exclusive body are on the floor at any given time and their attention to what a senator happens to be reading — a marked change in the rules that once forbade written speeches — is indifferent.

The other day, however, a carefully prepared speech that ventured some stern thoughts on the unthinkable shook up both Republicans and Democrats. The speaker, Sen. Jacob Javits, was a member of the delegation headed by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to the conference on International Economic Co-operation — popularly known as the North-South Conference — in Paris.

While Javits did not put undue stress on the failure of that conference to reach any meaningful agreement between the developed and developing nations, he left no doubt of the intensity of his feelings about the related question of the strains on the International Monetary System. Those strains, Javits said, threaten the United States and the world with a deeper recession than that of 1974 or a full-scale depression in 1979-80.

Privately, he told senators who congratulated him that unless action comes quickly to meet at least some of the demands from the developing countries, containing three-fourths of the world's population, we will see a depression that will scorch your hair. Very little attention has been paid to the disillusionment of the developing countries over the lack of results at the conference and not a word of Javits' warning got into the prints.

The root of the trouble is the way in which the developing nations have undertaken to solve their grave balance of payments deficits, growing in large part out of the quadrupling of oil prices by the OPEC countries, through private and government borrowing. Private bank loans to these countries total more than $70 billion, of which $42 billion is from U.S. banks.

This skirts on the delicate ground of continuing reports of the excess of loans by the big New York banks to the poor nations. Whether these loans can be repaid or even recycled is a question raised only in off-stage whispers.

The basic points Javits made is that the OPEC countries are free to deposit their billions of dollars in surplus revenue in the banks of strong industrialized nations. Then these banks have felt obligated to loan to poor nations to make up for their payments deficits. Statistics published by the Federal Reserve, Javits noted, show that for the United States alone, bank claims of over two years' maturity in the non-oil-developing nations total over $13 billion.

The debt to governments by these same nations is $80 billion, of which $29 billion is owed to the United States. This staggering accumulation, both private and government, grows out of a system — if indeed such an improvisation can be called a system — that cannot long continue.

One of the dismaying aspects of the North-South Conference was the refusal of the developing nations to give anything reciprocally for the large amounts of aid they are demanding. That is, increase the volume of commodities they can sell on the world market, improve agricultural production, curb the domination of narrow elites and, above all, increase family planning in order to put a brake on the population explosion. To comply fully with the demands of the developing nations, U.S. aid would have to be tripled.

The net flow of private funds to developing countries continues with the total $23 billion in 1976, most of it financed by banks. International financing systems are so strained by this arrangement, according to the senator, that some banks in certain countries are fully "loaned up."

The U.S. import of oil, greater than for any other country, must be cut back to reduce the imbalance in international payments. The danger is so great, Javits said, that even gasoline rationing cannot be ruled out.

One essential is to bring private enterprise in the developed countries into play using the multi-national corporations which have been regularized following revelation of abuses. By an interesting coincidence, about the time Javits was speaking, the president of the Ford Motor Company, Lee A. Iacocca, in an address to the Swiss-American Chamber of Commerce in Zurich, was talking about the need to raise the economic level of the Third World through the instrument of the multinational corporation.

How much of a dent this will make on public opinion is highly questionable. At a recent press conference, President Carter remarked that with the start of the tourist season, the use of gasoline will reach a record high of 7.7 million barrels a day. We seem to take it for granted that we can use the major share of the world's resources without regard to what may happen elsewhere.

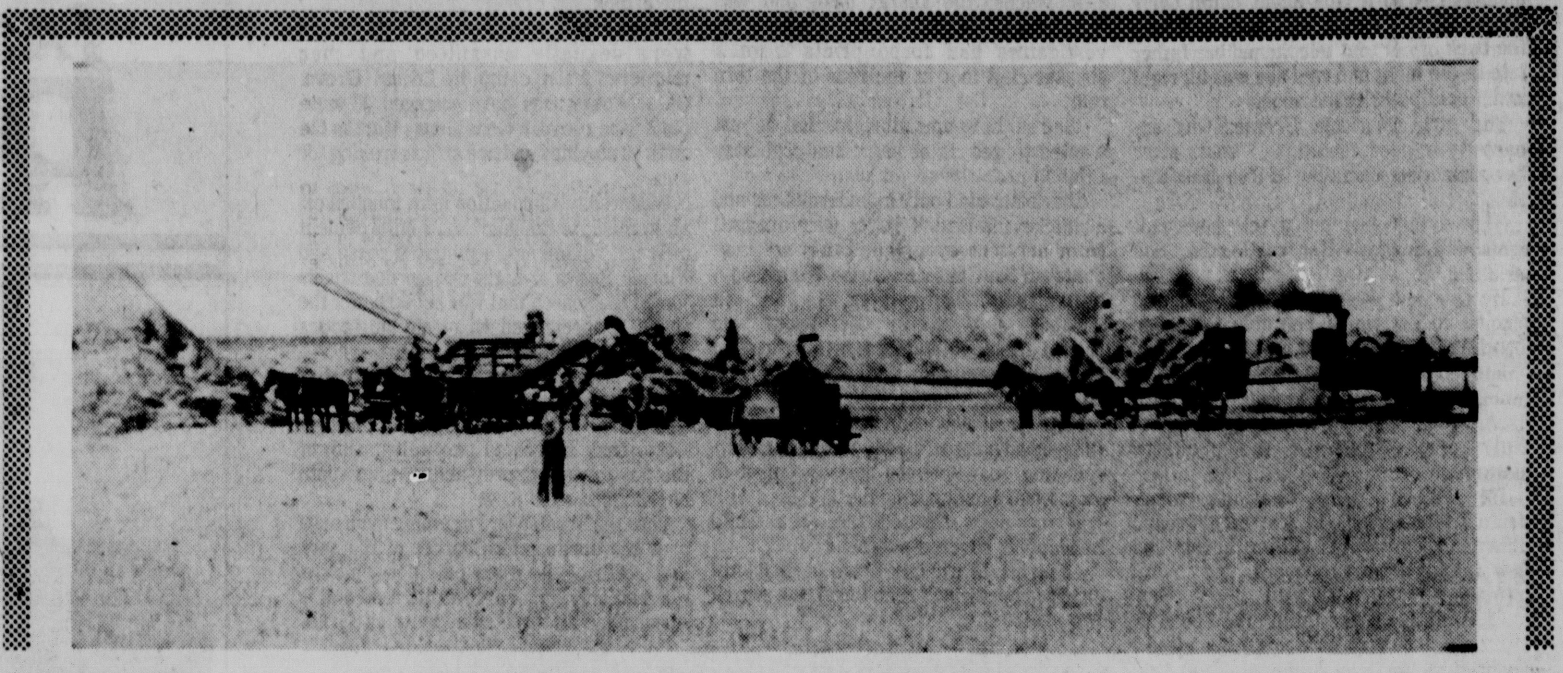
Patchwork prairie country



By LaVerna Hassler
Star Feature Writer

Today I saw our ripening wheat rippling in yellow waves under a drying wind and thought of an era gone for some years now . . . the threshing rig era, something left behind that I will never see again.

It was as pretty a picture as I ever hope to see, those wide acres of golden stubble stretching out in a flood around the farm. After the binder had bound the wheat and the sheaves were shocked, they stood like small beehives in a pattern across the field. The arching stems and the heads, bowed with the weight of grain, were left to dry in the wind.

There was always excitement when the threshing rig pulled into the farmyard followed more slowly by racks and teams. One by one the racks went to the field to begin loading the bundles while the separator and engine were set just the right distance so the belt between the two would have the correct tension.

There was the snort of the engine as the fly wheel rushed into motion and a low grumble of machinery. A smoke of dust billowed behind the racks lugged by teams sometimes skitterish by the moving belts and the sharp clack and clang of iron and chains.

With the feel of leather tugging in his palms, the pitcher coaxed his team up to the machine. Rims of the horses' nostrils stiffened as their great muscles rippled and tugged at the leather.

There was the shrilling of the cylinders as the self-feeder moved the dry bundles into the jowls of the threshing machine. A flash of fork tines moved rhythmically as the pitcher removed tier after tier of bundles. The hacking knives began the process as each grain laden bundle moved along the feeder. It took some skill to pitch the bundles just right and at the right pace, for the open feeder mouth devoured them swiftly . . . a hungry animal snaring its prey.

The hum of the cylinders growled and trembled while the fan and shaker added to the din.

"Whoa! Whoa!" shouted the teamster as his team took an uneasy step forward. Kernel and chaff were separated and the wheat hissed as it poured through the grain spout into a waiting wagon.

Under a slight puff of breeze, the chaff would lift, drifting over both man and beast. Smudges of dust hung in the air and there was the hot smell of oil and leather.

Between the engine and separator wavered a belt, a wide thread binding the distance together. It too had its own mingled smell of belt dressing and leather. On rare occasions it would slip off and the swelling clash of iron against iron would cease until it could be put back in place.

Nearby, the stack of fresh straw built by the boom of the blower grew higher and higher. The dry straw had an odor of its own, fresh and clean as the stubble from which it came.

Sweat dotted the faces of the threshers and gathered the dust that sifted from the wheel ruts. Lunch time provided the respite to wipe the sweat from the brow and ease the thirst while the team stood nearby now and then kicking at the flies that managed to get between the fly nets.

Pulling into place and guiding his team was another pitcher whose rack was built high and sturdy with golden bundles.

On and on it went throughout the day, shouting, the clang of machinery, the whir of wheels, the wind and the sun. But when evening came and the great engine and separator were stopped, the silence rushed. The pale yellow of a burned-out day thinned to darkness and weary men and beasts were glad for the respite. Dust and chaff hung in the air for awhile but when the quiet slanted down with the shadows, the dust settled and only the smell of fresh straw remained.

Perhaps it was the drying smell of straw and the glint of golden wheat that stirred the days of threshing into reality for me today. Whatever the sources, the song of those harvest days drifted faintly over the fields and was lost but it was good to hear the refrain once more.

Britain's Fleet Street wails in loud lament

James Reston

London — You can't come to Britain these days without wondering why it looks so good and sounds so terrible. In the generation since the last war, the condition of the people has improved beyond most predictions, but still it grumbles as much about the Socialists today as it used to about the Tories.

Part of the reason for the present carping is that it is going through another spate of labor unrest over wages and prices. Also it is approaching another election with a divided minority Labor government and a high rate of unemployment.

More people are out of work here now than at any time since the last world war — 1,350,000 or 3.5% of the work force. But the government's policy of financial restraint is beginning to work and the Callahan government is wheeling and dealing and almost begging for a little more time.

"Compared to a year ago," the Sunday Times business editor said this week, "the situation is markedly better financially, moderately improved industrially. The Treasury has got public spending under control. Interest rates have come down to a much more reasonable rate (from 15% last October to 8% today) . . . and the sterling exchange rate against the dollar has recovered from a low point of $1.55½ in late October to $1.70-72" this week.

During the celebration of Queen Elizabeth's Silver Jubilee, Fleet Street publications have naturally been bombarding the people with statistics on the improvement of the standard of living in the 25 years of her reign. This is small consolation at the present rate of taxes and prices, but the comparisons are interesting nevertheless.

"Comparing our estate with that of 25 years ago," says David Watt, the brilliant commentator of The Financial Times, "one is constantly struck by the prodigious growth of prosperity and range of choice of the people of these islands. This is not simply a matter of crude measures of wealth and wellbeing . . . What is impressive is the surge in the quality of life."

He notes not simply the alleviation of extreme poverty and disease, but the increase in the number of university students from 97,000 in 1952 to 275,000 in 1976, and he makes another valid point about the burst of creativity in the arts over the last generation.

He notes also the decline of privilege, the wider distribution of economic power, the moves towards equality for women, and "the general dismantling of class distinctions, formality, and snobbery."

Even so, the improved statistics, like the appearance of affluence, have not silenced the critics of the British social, economic and political systems. Here, as elsewhere in the Western world, the rising affluence has been accompanied by rising prices and inflation, and the increase of personal freedom, by an increase in crime, and what is surprising here a marked decline in respect for institutional authority.

The prices in the fancy shops of London's Mayfair make New York's Fifth Avenue look like a bargain basement. And the Fleet Street papers are full of laments about the waning respect for the police, for religion, and even, in the face of union monoply power, for Parliament itself.

An American coming here is constantly impressed by what seems to be the waste of talent in Britain — and the flight of talent and the discouragement of talent. Surely there cannot be another country in the world where so many attractive, intelligent and articulate people are working at jobs below their talents, unused or underused, or just plain discouraged.

Maybe this helps explain why Britain looks so good but sounds so gloomy.

The evidence not only of the good life but the elegant life is here for all to see — in the glittering shops, the excitement of Wimbledon and the races on the BBC, the gleaming limousines at the theaters and the big hotels. But one senses the beginning of a change here now. The complexities of modern life have been too much for the Socialists and Tories alike, and the people are clearly tired of the old ideological arguments and are looking for new approaches and probably for new leaders.

Former British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin used to say that "the trouble with the British people is their poverty of desire — they're too easily satisfied." But they're satisfied no longer — with the progress of the last year or the last 25 years, or the arguments of the parties, or the domination of the unions, or the impotence of Parliament.

Accordingly, as David Watt suggests, "The great questions for the next 25 years are really constitutional ones. Is the system capacle of adjusting itself to a whole new set of premises? . . .

"For the first time in a hundred years, there is some hope that we shall see displayed something of the much vaunted British political genius — adaptability, pragmatism, and determination to avoid violent solutions."

Ms. Nice Gal is out — the militant is in

Lincoln, Neb.

This is to protest the manner in which the Nebraska Women's Meeting was held June 24-26. The purpose of the meeting was to elect delegates to the Houston national meeting in the fall and to vote upon resolutions brought out of the various workshops held concerning some specific problem areas for women.

I deeply resent the fact that a certain well organized, well financed, and highly vociferous faction tried to take over the meeting. Those so-called pro-lifers (a term I also resent because it automatically and untruthfully makes anyone opposing their views "pro-death") tried by both parliamentary maneuvering and massive bus-in of "pro-life" voters to alter the true course of a meeting set up to be representative of all women in Nebraska. Those "lifers" did not attend workshops or contribute to an exchange of ideas; most of them just came in by the busload, stuffed the ballot boxes, and left.

I found it pitiful as well as unbelievable that women were voting against themselves under the domination of men — fathers, husbands, ministers, priests, etc. — on such basic issues as improved Social Security status for themselves, housing, credit, health and other (to me) innocuous issues. Are these women so cowed, so inbued with the "slave" mentality that they vote away their only hope of progress towards equality for themselves? Or are they afraid of the consequences of saying, "No more domination!" to the insatiable male ego? I pity those women, but I detest those men.

They may think they have won the war today, but it was just a skirmish. There are many others like me who went into that meeting as mild-mannered, middle-of-the-road feminists and came out as militants.

Onward, sisters! No more Ms. Nice Gal. We have nothing to lose but our inferior status.

Tax information

Omaha, Neb.

I want to express appreciation on behalf of the Internal Revenue Service to The Lincoln Star for the assistance and co-operation we received this year in providing tax information to Nebraska residents.

As in the recent past, changes in the federal tax law made this contribution to public understanding of those laws a valuable ingredient in another successful income tax filing season. We believe publications such as The Lincoln Star are a major factor in our overall success and particularly in our mission to strengthen our federal tax system.

Felt unwelcome

Lincoln, Neb.

The Star's June 27 article on the IWY conference was incomplete and unfair to those who work for the right to LIFE for all humans, born and unborn. All but one of the quotes were taken from the feminist point of view — that being self-righteousness and concern for self-liberation.

Not once did the article touch upon the so-called "parliamentary procedure" used in the meetings. Inaccurate vote-counting, unfair recognition of those present, and time-killing were some of the tactics used by the presiding women to confuse and intimidate many.

The pro-lifers who came were made to feel unwelcome. Some were threatened with physical violence by lesbians enraged at our mere presence. Since this is a tax-funded operation, I feel the workings of the national and state committees should be exposed. I felt a strong prejudice the whole time.

Let's get back to the right to LIFE, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Today's Pharisees

Lincoln, Neb.

I was at the IWY conference this past weekend along with hundreds of other women who expected two days of simply voicing our needs as human beings and our rights as Americans. However, there were so-called Christians present to denounce these basic needs and rights. These people came by bus and by recommendation of priests and ministers not only to disrupt the efforts of Donna Polk and others to make the conference organized, but to show their support toward continued oppression for Nebraska women.

For two days I listened to these pro-lifers and ERA opponents quote indiscriminate passages from the Bible to "prove" that women have no rights. These actions reminded me of another section of the Bible, when Christ denounced the Pharisees who fought for the letter of the Biblical law instead of the intent of that law. These people are our modern-day Pharisees.

ANOTHER CHRISTIAN WOMAN

Tax and spend

Lincoln, Neb.

What next?

One of the state capitol bureaucrats suggests bus service between Omaha and Lincoln for state employes and that a federal grant would be likely.

I don't think that any kind of tax money — whether city, county, state or federal — should be used for their service. If they want to live in Omaha and work in Lincoln, they should furnish their own transportation. These bureaucrats want to give too much service free to people.

This is like the dummy who wanted the tunnel under the street for the state employes. They like to spend peoples' tax money.

CONCERNED

RR crossings

Lincoln, Neb.

I think it's time to do some grousing about the deplorable condition of the railroad crossings in Lincoln. To mention a few, 56th and Y Streets, 19th and Vine, and the "ever-rough" 35th and Adams. There are many more needing work and I wonder why our elected representatives in city government are not attending to this. If the railroads are responsible for maintenance and repair, then get after them!

As a comparison, I also work in Omaha and find their crossings in excellent shape. For the past couple of years, Omaha has been testing a composition material on tracks at 76th and Dodge and 72nd and Pacific. These crossings have held up very well and Dodge Street carries more traffic than any street in Lincoln.

On another matter, who is responsible for the 40-mph speed limit on 84th Street from O Street south to Highway 2? This is absurdity at its height. It looks as though someone is deliberately designing a speed-trap.

MR. V.

Against our motto

Lincoln, Neb.

It was very interesting to watch democracy in action at the Nebraska International Women's Year meeting last weekend. One "party" has decided that there is only one issue in life: the right to be born. That is, once a person is born, this group is no longer interested in them as persons — American citizens — with rights guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States. Thus, it was astonishing to see Nebraska citizens, members of our so-called educated electorate, vote against reaffirmation of the Nebraska state motto: "EQUALITY UNDER THE LAW."

What then, pray tell, is democracy all about?

Indeed, as is written on the Capitol Building: "The salvation of the state is watchfulness in the citizen."

Canada upset over pollution

(c) Newhouse News Service

Washington — Air pollution from America's coal-fired electric power plants is fouling the skies over Canada in what amounts to an "environmental time-bomb," Canada's environmental chief says.

Voicing concern over the long-range transport of air pollutants through the atmosphere, Canadian Environmental Minister Romeo LeBlanc warned that any serious damage from pollution fall-out is likely to cloud relations between Canada and the United States.

He told the annual meeting of the Air Pollution Control Association that the two countries have been "negligent" in resolving environmental differences.

He said Canada is concerned about the likelihood of increased air pollution resulting from the conversion of many power plants in the United States from oil to high-sulfur coal.

The tendency of many utilities to build tall stacks as a device for reducing air pollution in the United States has increased the long-range transport of pollutants into Canada while reducing pollution near the power plants, he said.

Air pollution reaching Canada from sources in the United States is five times the quantity being transported to this country from Canadian sources, he said.

He added, "Continued long-range transport of pollutants holds grave implications for forests, wildlife, water quality and aquatic life, agriculture and public health."

LeBlance said Canada wants to begin bilateral talks with the Carter administration on the air pollution problem before many more utilities shift to coal.

The pollution problem, he said, can only be resolved if both nations agree to the principle that the polluter pays for whatever damage results from fall-out. He said the principle, adopted by some Canadian provinces, is both "equitable and economically sound."

While more scientific research needs to be done on the effects of long-range pollution transport, efforts to reduce pollution at its source should take place immediately on the political level, he said.

One approach might be to make air pollution standards tough enough to protect distant regions affected by the pollution. Another possible solution is to require utilities to install flue-gas scrubbers that reduce pollution at its source and preclude the need for tall stacks.

Nazi march in Jewish suburb unlikely

Chicago (AP) — Lawyers for an American Nazi group said Wednesday the group probably will call off its Fourth of July march through Skokie, a predominantly Jewish Chicago suburb.

After a court hearing, Nazi leader Frank Collin said he and his stormtroopers would march through Skokie only if it is legal.

"We won't break any laws," said Collin, son of a German Jew who survived a Nazi death camp.

Collin's statement was contrary to what he said Tuesday, when he said the march "is still definitely on — even if I have to break the law."

David Hamlin of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has represented the Nazis, said Collin's decision not to break the law means there are only two chances the march will occur July 4: "Slim and none."

Collin's group is prohibited from marching by an injunction handed down by a Circuit Court and by three Skokie ordinances.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ordered the Illinois Appellate Court to review the injunction, but arguments on that issue are not scheduled until July 8.

Furthermore, Collin and his attorneys have not challenged the three Skokie ordinances which also would have the effect of banning the march.

"Collin has told us he will do nothing that will lead to his arrest in Skokie," Hamlin said.

Collin had planned to march with followers dressed in Nazi uniforms through Skokie, which has an estimated 7,000 survivors of Nazi Germany concentration camps.

A Nazi spokesman, Michael Whalen, said Skokie was selected "to demonstrate that we're not allowed to speak in Chicago or Skokie or other suburbs. And we feel the Jews are behind all this."

Declining raw farm product prices are first for year

Washington (UPI) — Declining prices for soybeans, cattle, corn, wheat, vegetables and fruit sent the average of all raw farm product prices down 5% in the month ending June 15, the first drop this year, the Agriculture Department reported Wednesday.

The decline, measuring prices at the farm level before commodities flow into the food industry pipeline for processing and eventual delivery to consumers, broke a string of five monthly increases which lifted the farm price average 8.9% between last December 15 and May 15. It left the average prices 6% below a year earlier, but 2.7% above last December.

The lower prices for soybeans, cattle and other commodities were partly offset by gains for hogs and dairy products, the department's Crop Reporting Board said.

Soybean prices averaged $8.18 per bushel for the month, according to the report. This compared with $9.40 in mid-May and $6.16 a year ago.

Cattle prices slumped to $34.10 a hundredweight compared with $36.10 a month earlier and $36.40 a year ago. Corn prices dropped from $2.21 a bushel in May to $2.09 compared with $2.74 a year earlier.

At the same time, an index of farm costs fell 0.5% and was 5% above a year earlier. Officials, comparing the trends in commodity prices and production costs, said farmers' prices averaged 67% of the "fair" parity level in mid-June compared with 70% a month ago and 74% a year ago.

Agriculture officials said retail food prices, which averaged 4.3% above a year earlier from January through May, should now advance more slowly through the rest of the year if farmers get continued good growing weather.

For all of 1977, experts predict a 6% increase in grocery prices — about double the 1976 gain but still well below the 8.5% rise of 1975 and the 14.5% gains of 1973-74.

The volatile farm price index helps point toward future trends in consumer food prices. But it does not always indicate immediate changes at the retail level, partly because retail prices are affected heavily by processing and other marketing costs.

Also, economists said 60% of all retail food price increases posted from last December through May were due to imported products like coffee and fish which are not measured by the agriculture crop price reports.

While cattle declined, hog prices rose from $40.70 per hundred-weight in May to $41.90 in Mid-June compared with $49.20 a year ago.

But wheat growers harvesting a bumper crop in the face of an already-heavy surplus saw their prices fall from $2.29 a bushel on May 15 to $2 a bushel in mid-June compared to $3.42 a year earlier.

The wheat price was below government support levels. Farmers have been appealing for government action to raise the income support payments for which they will be eligible.

A department price index for vegetables fell 9% during the month, with all vegetables except asparagus declining, but was 4% above a year earlier.

The index of meat animal prices was down 3% and was 9% below a year earlier. Indexes for food grains and feed grains and hay declined 7% with the food grain index 37% under a year ago and the feed grain index 21% below a year earlier.

Indexes for fruit and oil bearing crops, although both declined for the month, were 25% and 29% above a year earlier respectively.

Youthful painted faces are big fad of summer of '77

Kings Mills, Ohio (UPI) — One of the latest fads in this seemingly carefree-oriented summer of '77 is to have your face painted in bright colors and wild designs and then walk around soaking up double-takes from passersby.

"Why not?" said a youth with crisp, clean lines of washable paint forming jagged red stars around his eyes. "It makes me feel really free for awhile. I have no cares and the rest of the world is just spinning by."

The fad has especially caught hold at places like Kings Island amusement park, where artists are charging from between $1 and $2.25 for facial paint-jobs.

"We just started it this summer and a lot of people want it done," said 18-year old Kelly Dunlap, one of several young artists whose entire summer job will consist of painting faces.

"When I finish, the people stand in front of our mirror and just stare and stare. Then they can't wait to go walk around the park. I think it makes them feel like a different person.

"They may be a little self-conscious at first, but a lot of them come back later in the day and tell me they really like it. Some want to know if they can go home and sleep with it on and keep it the next day. But it's washable paint and rubs off on pillows."

Not everybody appreciates the fad.

"I've had some kids do it without telling their parents and they come back and say, 'My mom saw me and she about killed me.' "

But some mothers insist on having their infants painted.

"I like painting the little kids the best, say from ages 3 to 10," said Kelly. "They really get excited. I think a lot of them believe they're clowns."

Some adults also get painted and Kelly said her wildest paint job was requested by a disc jockey from Virginia.

"He had me paint a spiral that started from his eyelid and encircled his entire face," she said. "He also had me paint his neck and then put my initials on it — like an artist signing a picture."

Joe Rale and Timothy Gault get great double-takes.

LAP directors planning for expected budget cut

In anticipation of the denial of $50,000 to the Lincoln Action Program by the city and county governments, the LAP board of directors has mapped a reorganized agency for the next fiscal year.

The word was received by LAP employes Tuesday in a letter that said 62 employes would be reduced to about 45 and all wages frozen beginning in October if the funds didn't arrive.

"We have no reason to believe the city or county will provide funding," said Jerry Cinani, chairman of the LAP board's planning and program committee.

"In view of that loss, some adjustment had to be made in the budget," he said.

LAP is federally funded primarily, by the Community Service Agency, but other funds have come from the city and county in the past.

"What we did was look at positions, not people," Cinani said.

The adjustment apparently consolidated or knocked out mostly administrative positions, although Cinani wouldn't give particulars until all of the persons involved had been notified.

LAP has applied for and probably will get about $400,000 in federal funds, the exact amount it received for this year.

Only one outreach position will get the ax, employes were told, which will leave about 10 persons who actually pound the sidewalks with LAP programs.

The cuts also will allow LAP to keep its programs at full strength

Former chaplain decries Pvt. Slovik's execution

Washington (AP) — A former Army chaplain testified Wednesday that Pvt. Eddie Slovik was put before a firing squad in 1945 shortly after Gen. Dwight Eisenhower decided that a deserter must be shot as an example to troops fleeing from the front lines.

Rabbi David M. Eichhorn told a Pentagon review board that the Army "combed military prisons to find deserters who had thrown down their arms and fled from the enemy on two or more occasions." Six men were found, he said, but only Slovik was executed.

The review board is considering the appeal of Slovik's widow for about $70,000 plus interest on her husband's National Service Life Insurance policy. The widow's attorney, Bernard Edelson, argued that Slovik was killed unjustly.

"Eddie Slovik was not guilty of a crime," said Edelson. The attorney said Slovik "did not have the capacity to fight."

Gordon M. Hobbs, who presided over the hearing, said the panel will make its recommendation to the Army secretary in one or two weeks.

Rabbi Eichhorn, a retired lieutenant colonel from Satellite Beach, Fla., told the board his testimony was not intended to influence their decision. But he added "I felt the time perhaps had come to put this information on record."

Under questioning from board members, he acknowledged that he personally did not have first-hand information about the planned executions but said he had no reason to doubt the story. He said he could not pin down exactly who told him of the developments but said either the 7th Army chaplain or personnel staff told him why execution plans had been drawn up.

Rabbi Eichhorn, said each of the six soldiers selected for execution were given "an intense psychiatric examination" and that a number of the soldiers were declared mentally unbalanced.

"But one of those who were given psychiatric clearance, the private Slovik, was shot," the rabbi said.

Edelson argued that Slovik "was no more guilty and his record was no worse than many others who did much worse than he."

Gandhi daughter-in-law: phones tapped

New Delhi (UPI) — Menaka Gandhi, daughter-in-law of ousted Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, charged Wednesday that telephones at her home were tapped and that police kept a vigil on her husband.

Menaka, wife of Sanjay Gandhi, controversial son of the former premier, said in a letter to the Time of India the new Janata Party government's contention that private citizen telephones were no longer tapped and surveillance removed "was untrue."

"Charan Singh (the home minister) says that the bugging of phones has stopped and people are not being followed any more. Absolutely untrue," the letter said.

"The phones at 12 Willingdon Crescent (a government-alloted house in New Delhi were Mrs. Gandhi stays) are tapped and a lot of our friends have complained that their phones are bugged," Menaka said.

Woman finds Tris everywhere

Los Altos, Calif. (AP) — Angela Horine spent Mother's Day this year snipping tiny samples of fabric from her children's nightgowns, wrapping the clippings in copper wire and burning them.

Every time she saw a spurt of green flame, she knew this nightie or that sleeper she'd been putting on her 1½-year-old daughter probably contained the chemical Tris (2,3-dibromopropyl) phosphate, suspected of causing cancer.

"It breaks my heart because I remember the baby, how sweet she looked in those pajamas, and now we find out they have Tris in them," she says. "They have known it would probably cause cancer for at least two years now. If they'd done something then, my baby could have avoided all that exposure."

Mrs. Horine and a neighbor, Catherine Clement, have mounted a crusade to inform parents about the dangers of the chemical, banned in April by the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission as a flame retardant in children's clothing.

Mrs. Horine, 35, has written articles for local newspapers and for newsletters put out by her husband's electronics company and her 14-year-old's junior high school. A friend posted the warnings in her pediatrician's examining rooms.

Mrs. Horine's campaign has enjoyed some modest success. She says she convinced one disbelieving executive of a children's clothing company to test all his son's pajamas. She has received encouraging letters from government officials, and friends call her to check out new sleepwear purchases for their own children.

"People are very misinformed about the dangers of Tris," says Mrs. Horine. "Some people say, 'Oh, everything causes cancer. I'm not going to bother to go through all my kids' pajamas.'

"But I think if you're not upset, you really don't know the facts."

How real is the danger? Since cancer experiments cannot be performed on humans, nobody knows for sure. But tests by the National Cance Institute showed Tris to be a potent carcinogen in rats and mice, and other experiments have shown that Tris rubbed off from clothing can be readily absorbed into the skin.

Dr. Bruce Ames, a University of California biochemist whose tests first spotted Tris as a potential carcinogen two years ago, has estimated that 17,000 of every million children who wore Tris-treated pajamas might develop kidney tumors by the time they reach their 20s.

Other scientists estimate a lower human risk factor — 300 kidney cancers per million male children by one study, 6,000 per million in another. In these studies, the risk factor for young girls was estimated to be about one fifth that for boys.

After 1972, when flammability standards went into effect for children's nightwear, Tris was used as a flame retardant in all acetate, triacetate and most 100 per cent polyester pajamas up to size 6. In 1975, the standards were extended to cover sizes 7-14.

Mrs. Horine, who had saved nightgowns from each of her five daughters for passing along to the next, couldn't remember what she'd purchased when.

So she and a chemist friend developed a simple test: Wrap a tiny snippet of fabric in copper or brass wire and hold it in a steady flame in a well-ventilated room. If the flame burned green, Mrs. Horine says, she knew the fabric contained one of several chemicals, the most likely being Tris.

If she saw the green flame, she put the garment aside and wrote to the manufacturer to be sure.

When she finished with the sleepwear, she started on the bedding. She found Tris in blankets, pillows, comforters and one of her daughter's sleeping bags.

"Then I thought I was done and I tucked my 6-year-old in bed that night and thought, 'Here you are in your Tris-free pajamas and your tris-free bed and you're safe.' "

That was before she tested Rosy, the ancient stuffed giraffe she tucked into bed with 6-year-old Jennifer every night. The flame burned bright green.

So it was back to the torch with all the doll clothes, dolls and stuffed animals accumulated over 14 years by five girls. Mrs. Horine got a positive test in half the dolls' hair or clothes.

Robert Poth, compliance officer for the Consumer Product Safety Commission in Bethesda, Md., says the staff is compiling information on health hazards of Tris used in materials other than children's clothing.

The commission recently sent Mrs. Horine a list of Tris-treated products not covered by the ban. Included were toy sewing kits, home insulation materials, auto upholstery fabric, Christmas decorations and polyester thread used by the garment industry.

Mrs. Horine and Mrs. Clement were not convinced by the commission's recommendation that Tris-treated children's clothing would be safe after it was washed three times.

"I got a strong green flame on things I'd washed hundreds of times," Mrs. Horine says.

Dr. Robert Harris of the Environmental Defense Fund in Washington says his group thinks even laundered Tris-treated clothing is dangerous. The EDF is suing the Consumer Product Safety Commission in an effort to force a ban on all clothing and fabric treated with the chemical.

The EDF also has asked the commission to order cancer tests on other chemicals — some of them chemically similar to Tris — used as flame retardants in children's sleepwear.

Mrs. Horine threw out all the Tris-treated items she found in her house. Mrs. Clement went even further: She threw out everything that might have been washed with her daughter's Tris-treated garments.

"I had to wait a long time to have a baby," says Mrs. Clement, 36, as she watched her dark-eyed 20-month-old daughter playing in Mrs. Horine's yard. "I refuse to take any chances."

How will they haul the coal?

Pittsburgh (AP) — The nation's coal industry will be digging at a furious pace to meet President Carter's energy goals, but some producers wonder if the coal can be moved once it's out of the ground.

They're skeptical about the ability of the transportation industry, particularly railroads, to haul their product.

"They can't handle what we've got. What would happen if we really started cranking out the coal," asked Horace Van Meter, vice president of operations at Jewell Smokeless Coal in Grundy, W.Va.

Of the 665 million tons of bituminous coal mined last year, railroads carried 66 per cent, or about 440 million tons. The rest was moved by barge or truck or used at mine-mouth generating plants.

As part of his plan to reduce reliance on dwindling supplies of oil and natural gas, Carter wants the coal industry to mine more than one billion tons by 1985. The coal industry has doubts that goal can be met and cites environmental concerns as one of the biggest roadblocks. But presuming the one billion ton goal can be met and assuming the railroads keep their same share of the traffic, they'll be hauling about 725 million tons in eight years. Railroad officials greet the prospect of a coal boom with undisguised glee.

Although the industry has high fixed costs, once those costs are met profits can be handsome and coal traffic may well propel the railroads beyond the break-even point.

"The industry is suffering from a Penn Central (bankruptcy) hangover. That's the image," said Dan Lang of the Association of American Railroads (AAR). But he said coal hauling roads are doing well.

Some, such as the Chessie System and the Union Pacific, are money-makers and their roadbed and equipment are in good shape.

But there are also roads like Conrail, the government-created hybrid of six bankrupt Northeastern railroads. Their coffers are empty, their equipment decrepit and their tracks falling apart.

There is also a hopper car shortage, which does little to inspire coal industry confidence in the railroads' ability to meet the energy challenge.

According to Conrail spokesman Tom Hoppin, there is currently an industry-wide shortage of about 4,000 coal cars.

Railroads blame the shortages on peaks and valleys in coal production, saying they can't afford to have cars sitting idle.

But a spokesman for one of the nation's largest coal companies said railroads historically have a poor record of supplying equipment.

"The railroads tell us now that when we increase our production, they can easily increase the car supply because it takes a lot longer to open a mine than it does to build a hopper car. Well, that's the same damn story I've heard for 25 years," he said. To handle the increased coal tonnage, the AAR estimates up to 13,400 hopper cars, which cost about $30,000 each, and 670 locomotives, with a $500,000 price tag, will have to be acquired by 1985. The investment could well range from $4 billion to $6 billion.

The figures sound high, but Lang says they would not be a crushing financial burden. "Rail equipment is a pretty easy thing to borrow money for," he said.

Many railroads are already gearing up for the expected traffic. Chessie, for instance, is planning to acquire 35,000 hopper cars at a cost of $1 billion beginning in 1980. And Conrail, vital to Appalachian coal fields, is in the midst of a $6 billion rehabilitation program.

The potential for a coal-generated boom for the railroads has not been lost on investors.

As of June 10, Wall Street's Value Line ranked western railroads at a sizzling No. 8 out of 90 industries rated. "Western roads are diversified and they have tremendous natural resource holdings along their rights of way," a Value Line spokesman said.

Eastern roads, sensitive to Conrail's difficulties and the volatile coal labor situation in Appalachia, were rated 48th.

Railroads are already facing stiff competition for coal business from builders of coal slurry pipelines, which could move coal — ground to the consistency of sugar and mixed with water — over great distances.

At the moment there is only one slurry system operating in the U.S. — the 273-mile Black Mesa line that has been moving coal for seven years from northern Arizona to a power station in southern Nevada.

But a number of other pipelines are planned, and the most ambitious is a $750 million project by Energy Transportation Systems Inc. (ETSI) that would move 25 million tons of coal a year over 1,036 miles from Wyoming to Arkansas.

Railroads are bitterly opposed to slurry systems, and they have refused to allow proposed pipelines to cross their tracks.

"We think they're unnecessary," said Lang. "They would also skim away the cream of the coal traffic."

Opponents also argue that pipelines would require huge amounts of water in areas that have little water to spare.

But ETSI's Frank Odasz says pipelines would not only be nonpolluting and inconspicuous because they would go underground, they also would be cheaper than railroads because there would be little labor cost.

He says ETSI's pipeline will be able to deliver coal to southern utilities at a 30-year average cost of $7.90 per ton, compared to the railroad's $28.50 per ton.

The coal industry understandably favors pipeline development.

"We simply must be able to move coal better, faster and with greater reliability and economy," said National Coal Association President Carl Bagge. "All modes of transport must be improved and new ones, like coal pipelines, must be introduced and used on a broader scale."

Odasz says simply, "We can't afford to put all our transportation eggs in one basket."

Comprehensive plan draws suits

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

The Lincoln-Lancaster County Comprehensive Regional Plan is barely six months old, but it has already attracted three lawsuits.

Suits No. 2 and 3 have been filed in Lancaster County District Court, while the first suit was ruled against last week. That suit, by Lincoln businessman Newt Copple, had challeneged the validity of the Comprehensive Plan and noted a conflict of interest by City Councilman Steve Cook who voted for the plan.

District Court Judge William Blue upheld the validity of the plan and said officials may proceed with its implementation, in his ruling of June 23.

The most recent suits challenge the Comprehensive Plan and a change of zone ordinance passed by the city council regarding land near 56th and Old Cheney Rd., which developer Hub Hall wants to turn into a shopping center. Copple, who wants to develop his own shopping center at 40th and Old Cheney, filed one suit while Lincoln surgeon Dr. Stephen Carveth and attorney Charles Wright filed the other.

Carveth, who lives at 63rd and Old Cheney, and Wright, of Route 9 (also on Old Cheney), allege the proposed center at 56th and Old Cheney would have a "detrimental lmpact" on their properties and will have an "adverse affect upon the Comprehensive Plan and future planning efforts."

The nine-page suit claims that Wright lives within 775 feet of the rezoned tract and Carveth within 410 feet. It further alleges that a shopping center on the tract will "greatly increase the traffic" in the area and will "greatly affect the noise level of the area."

The council voted to approve the zoning change, paving the way for development of the 58-acre tract, on May 9, 1977, after the location had been removed as a point of contention in Copple's original suit (the one ruled on last week). Hall's attorneys had argued that their site shouldn't be included in that action because neither Cook, nor Copple, had any interest in the area. Cook is a partner with businessman John O'Neill in a proposed shopping center at 27th and Pine Lake Rd. The judge agreed and the council action was given the go-ahead.

Copple, who has had a running battle with the city over the Comprehensive Plan, alleges that the rezoning ordinance giving approval for the Hall plan violates the Comprehnsive Plan. He also notes the other suit which he has pending against the plan (Copple still have the option to appeal Blue's decision on that suit).

Both suits ask the court to find the rezoning ordinance void and of no force and effect.

Brothers guilty of beer theft

Two Lincoln brothers were found guilty Wednesday of stealing 279 cases of Coors beer from an interstate truck shipment and selling the brew on the parking lot of the Moose Lodge.

A six-man, six-woman jury in U.S. District Court returned the guilty verdict against Clifford Pulec, 39, and his brother Bob, 32, for the felony charge that carries a fine of up to $5,000 to 10 years in prison.

U.S. District Court Judge Warren K. Urbom said he would sentence the two men on July 21 following an investigation by the federal probation officer.

The beer was part of a shipment of 2,000 cases from an Oklahoma City liquor dealer that stopped in Lincoln last July en route to New Jersey. The Pulecs drove the truck to Lincoln, then left the trailer of beer in Council Bluffs where the trucking firm that they worked for was headquartered.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeffrey Bogue, in his closing remarks to the jury, admitted that the government's case against the Pulecs was circumstantial, since no one saw them take the beer from the truck.

During the trial, however, Bogue produced six witnesses who said they bought a total of 135 cases from the Pulecs last July 19 for $4 a case.

The Pulecs testified they sold about 140 cases of beer on that day, but said it was beer they had bought while driving a truck in neighboring states. They said they only sold about 60 cases for $4, because it had gone bad, and had sold the rest for $6.

Conflicting evidence on how the truck was loaded and how long the brothers were in Oklahoma City also surfaced during the trial.

"Somebody's not telling the truth," Bogue said in his remarks, and noted Bob Pulec had admitted lying to a Federal Bureau of Investigation officer.

Paul Conley, the Pulecs' attorney, said the differences in testimony were the result of "innocent misrecollections" due to the fact that the incident occurred some 11 months ago.

Conley told the jury that the truck may have been 279 cases short when it left Oklahoma City.

Black rule policy backed by 46-25%

By Louis Harris

Harris Poll

By 46-25%, the American people endorse the administration's policy of favoring black rule in African countries where the blacks are in a majority. This, however, is a sharp drop from the 62-15% majority who held this view a year ago.

Basically, by almost four to one, the public feels that South Africa's policy of apartheid cannot be justified. By an even more emphatic margin, a majority is also convinced that "with black nationalism taking over in Africa, sooner or later, white rule of South Africa is doomed."

Yet a recent Harris Survey of 1,625 adults nationwide indicates that the American people are plainly uncomfortable at the prospect of this country interfering in the internal affairs of South Africa. A 76-7% majority holds the view that "the U.S. does not have the right to tell South Africa how it should run its country any more than South Africans have a right to tell us how to run our country." As a consequence, Americans oppose by 50-21% the U.S. taking a more active role in opposing the policy of apartheid.

Yet they are prepared to exert some pressure, and this can be seen in the depth of support that the public gives to certain positions which Vice President Mondale took when he met with South African Prime Minister Voerster last month:

—By 64-11%, a majority believes Mondale "was right when he said the U.S. could not morally justify helping South Africa militarily if that country gets involved in war with neighboring black countries."

—By a lesser 42-27%, a plurality also agrees with the vice president's statement that "unless the South Africans change their racial policies, the U.S. will not help them if they are threatened by Cuban or other Communist military action." Here, people are saying that as much as they object to Communist gains in Africa, they do not think this country should defend a white government in a country with a black majority even if it portrays itself as a bastion of anticommunism. The public feels that this stand is justified because it simply lays out as a matter of fact just what the U.S. will or will not do.

Although the public supports the administration's hands-off policy in the event of military action against the South African government, it is equally emphatic about not wanting this country to give active support to black African countries or black groups within South Africa who are trying to oust the present white government.

In many ways, the test case of South Africa points up the delicate balance the President must keep as he pursues his policy of calling for human rights everywhere in the world. Clearly the American people believe that South Africa's suppression of its black majority cannot be justified, and they will support any statement by their leaders that expresses disapproval of such inequities. At the same time, the public is equally convinced that we should not be the leader in organizing the overthrow of governments that might be violating human rights. The right of self-determination is still precious to most Americans.

Music illustrates differences within communist Europe

Wyman found rock music out in the open in Poland, but not in Romania.

By Deb Gray
Star Staff Writer

This is a story of two countries, or, rather, one man's perception of two countries, ones that most of us will never see.

Twice this year, Dr. William Wyman, music professor at Nebraska Wesleyan University and director of the NWU choir, has traveled behind the Iron Curtain: first, to Romania with the NWU choir, then, by himself, to Poland; both times, at the invitation of their governments.

Both countries have similiar government structures (both are ruled by Communist parties), but the governments manifest themselves differently.

And, thus, the music and arts created by the two countries are also different, Wyman said . . . except for rock music.

In Poland, rock music was as omnipresent as American as Muzak: in the elevators, on the streets, in lobbies.

In Romania, rock music was a behind-closed-doors thing. Romanian youth asked choir members to come home with them and listen to American disco records.

The Romanian tour, which blended art and diplomacy, was sponsored by the Romanian government (which paid for choir member's expenses once they reached the country) and, in America, by the Friendship Ambassadors.

Friendship Ambassadors, a foundation supported by big money from DeWitt Clinton, the Reader's Digest founder, is dedicated to the theory that the best way to warm understanding between countries, is cultural exchange, rather than ambassadors haggling around a conference table.

Friendship Ambassadors has sponsored primarily popular ensembles — such as jazz bands or swing choirs, Wyman said. The NWU choir sings primarily sacred literature.

The choir was the first ensemble allowed to tour during the winter months, in "the heart of the academic year," and the first to be allowed to perform in Romanian conservatories.

The choir performed in concert halls that seated between 1,000 to 1,500 persons. Those seats were always filled, with another 200 to 300 persons jamming the aisles and hanging over balconies, Wyman said.

The audience applauded after every piece until the choir repeated it, one more time.

And when the concert ended, "we were mobbed," Wyman said. At least a half-hour would pass before the choir could leave the hall, Wyman said.

The lights would be turned out, a signal for everyone to clear out, and audience and performers would be left groping in the dark.

And the Romanians came bearing gifts: flowers, records, art.

The polish visit was a "shot out of the dark." In March, Wyman received an invitation to participate in the Arts Education Conference, held May 5-19 in four Polish cities.

At the conference, Wyman spoke about trends of arts education, citing Nebraska projects that were "of national interest," such as, the bicentennial sculptures and the dialogue of the Arts project sponsored by the Nebraska Arts Council.

Wyman had only superlatives for what he saw in Poland: descriptions you would usually get from a travel agent, words like "terribly exciting," fabulous" and "incredible."

Polish arts instructors, Wyman said thought their methods and their buildings would seem "primitive" by American standards.

"It's true we have better buildings, but we don't begin to do the kinds of things they do with what we have," Wyman said.

Wyman said he saw the best opera of his life. He saw "incredible" mime. Cracow has replaced Vienna as his favorite city. He attended concerts in halls "with the top acoustics of any place I have heard."

Wyman observed classes in the public schools and the "general level of proficiency," compared to what he sees in American schools, is much higher, he said.

Polish schools single out talented children when they are young, Wyman said. Those with talent are given the best training so they can develop those talents, he said.

"There is an entirely different focus to the music," Wyman said, comparing the cultures of the two Communist nations.

The difference between Poland's avant-garde, Western-influenced music, and Romania's "nationalist, folk-oriented" arts can be explained by outside factors, Wyman said — differences in politics and economy.

In Romania, public adulation of President Nicolae Ceausescu reaches deification level, like the love Mao Tse-tung and Ho Chi Minh received in the hearts of their countrymen. People chant his name in the streets. His picture is painted on buildings. Music extols Romanian virtues, Wyman said.

In Poland, "you wouldn't know who the leader was unless you read it in the newspaper," Wyman said.

Western music is allowed into Poland, but in Romania, "access to Western music is very limited," Wyman said. Choir directors would plead with Wyman to give them musical scores.

"They didn't want me to send any music in the mail, because they said it would be too dangerous," Wyman said.

Barber pole defended

Palo Alto, Calif. (UPI) — Barber Will Buchta is standing in the defense of what he thinks is a sacred national tradition — the red-and-white striped barber pole which still rotates outside the entrance of some tonsorial parlors.

"I'm fighting a battle for myself and all other barbers," said Buchta, who expects to be jailed or fined for refusing to obey an eight-year-old ordinance recently called to the attention of barbers in this quiet university city.

The ordinance bans signs with lights and motion.

"It's an American tradition they are destroying," Buchta said. "That pole is an emblem, a tradition."

After receiving a notice from the city building inspector pointing out the illegality of his barber pole, Buchta asked some of his customers what they thought of such a law.

"They're 100% in sympathy with me," the barber said.

About 10 barbers in Palo Alto still had revolving poles when the word was put out that they must conform to the law obviously written to restrict more garish things than the plain old barber pole.

Some of them pulled the plug on their candy-stick poles, but Buchta is holding out and waiting for the law to come and get him.

Meanwhile, he has rallied the local Chamber of Commerce to his side, and the city council has been brought into the issue with the introduction of a new measure to make the traditional turning barber pole legal again.

Town mourns loss of tavern's silver coin bar

Black Diamond, Wash. (AP) — The Morganville Tavern just isn't the same without its inlaid silver dollar bar. Neither is the town.

Tavern owner Rick King discovered the loss when he went to open his roadside watering hole. Gone was the 22-foot countertop with 400 silver dollars imbedded in the wood.

"The silver dollar bar was like a part of the town," said Police Chief Jack Berge. Each coin inlaid in the bar had the name of the person who donated it carved underneath, he said.

King estimated the value of the bar, which dates to 1878, at $8,000.

Berge said it would have taken two persons several hours of work with a crowbar to pry the countertop off its base and a one-ton flatbed truck to take it away.

Stress to be fought at NU's Med Center

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

A killer stalks modern man from out of his primitive past.

This killer is not a saber-toothed tiger or a venomous reptile. It doesn't crawl out of the ground, fly through the air or leap from the trees.

Man can't run away from it because he carries it with him, inside of him. It's the body itself, which hasn't changed very much in hundreds of thousands of years even though man has gone from stone axes and animal skins to nuclear missiles and polyester suits.

This killer is commonly referred to as stress, which causes high blood pressure and heart disease. It can also cause emotional illness, alcoholism and drug abuse.

Through a biological survival mechanism, man reacts to any confrontation with a faster heart beat, increased blood pressure and hormone levels, tensed muscles and signals from nerves.

In other times, man used such stimuli to fight or run, depending on the situation. But modern man has more confrontations of a different kind brought to him through expanding technology. And he has less opportunity for physical release of the stress.

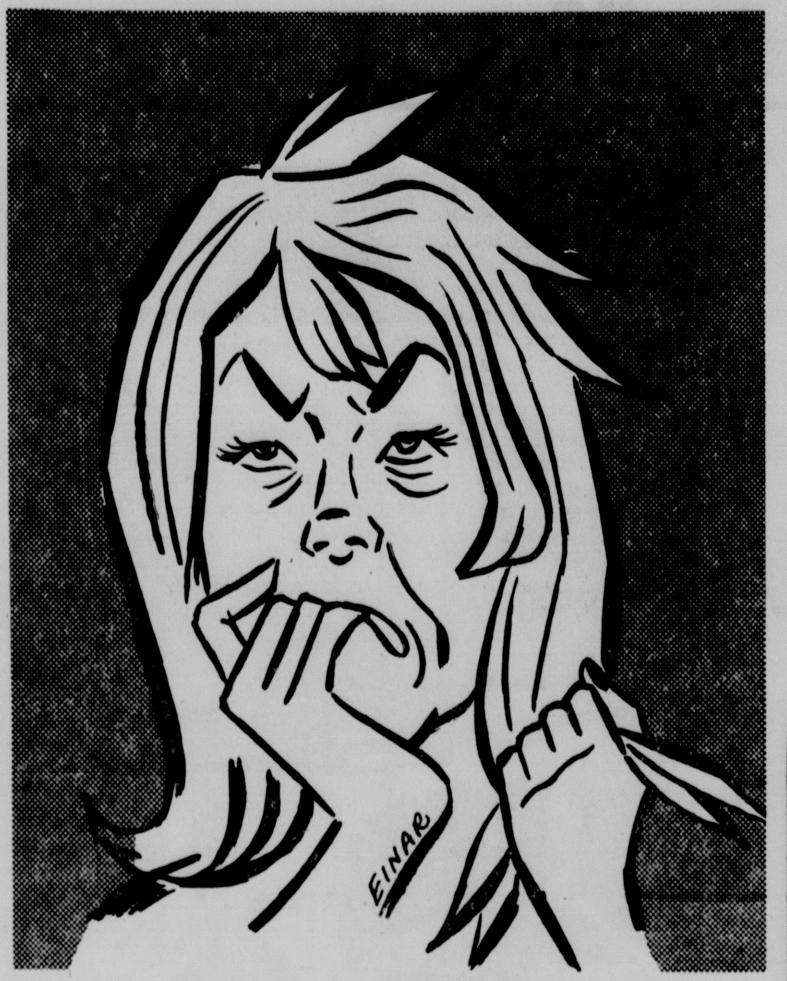
So stress can become a killer.

And that's where the International Stress Foundation would like to intervene. A recently formed, nonprofit organization, ISF plans to integrate medical, psychological and sociological research and testing to combat stress, according to Wynn Sanderson, executive director. ISF will establish a stress center at the University of Nebraska Medical Center, Sanderson said. That clinic will test people who are in high stress situations, such as managerial and professional positions. It will also test those who show signs of stress-related diseases.

One use of such a center may be evaluating corporate personnel who are being considered for new jobs to see if their health matches the rigors of the job, Sanderson explained.

After medical examinations and psychological tests, people who show up as potential stress victims will be given instructions on how better to cope with stress.

"We've got to come up with a program that's better than 'You have to lose weight and quit smoking,' " Sanderson said. Counseling may include exercise programs, nutritional evaluation, changing lifestyles and treating such problems as alcoholism and drug abuse.



ISF plans to act as a link between the highly technical findings of research around the country, and the ordinary person who needs to know how to cope with the stress in his life, Sanderson explained.

All data on an individual patient will have to be fed into a computer and given to the physicians and counselors who will suggest changes tailored to the individual.

The organization will also funnel funds to research, both in this country and abroad, on stress-related problems.

Sanderson said the organization chose Nebraska because UNMC's cardio-vascular center has received continued support from the Legislature. The man who heads that center, Dr. Robert Elliot, is one of the top experts on stress and is also chairman of the ISF board.

"We hope to be as well known as the Mayo Clinic within the next three years," Sanderson said. In order to make the clinic and the research a reality, ISF has set a goal of raising $4 million in contributions across the country in the next year.

Boys must wear gym suits too

Amherst, Ohio (AP) — A mother who decided to make an issue of a school rule requiring her daughter to wear a uniform in gym class has won. Now the boys have to wear uniforms.

Mrs. Tom Lockhart was upset because girls at the local junior high school had to buy an $8 gym suit that wasn't required of boys. She thought her daughter should be able to wear shorts and a T-shirt to gym class — just like the boys did.

She also protested the procedure by which her daughter could be excused from taking a shower during her menstrual period. That required that a girl should "M" after the calling of her name while the teacher was taking roll.

The American Civil Liberties Union — which she asked for assistance — called the gym suit requirement a violation of a federal law banning sex discrimination in public schools. The shower question was termed an invasion of privacy by Oberlin ACLU chairman Harvey Gittler.

"We (the ACLU) said it was no one's business whether or not a young woman was having her period — especially a sensitive 12- or 13-year-old," Gittler said.

Since the ACLU complained that the girls' gym suit requirement was discriminatory, boys now are required to buy a standard uniform as well.

Marcella Ridenour, a spokesman for the Board of Education in the Amherst district, said the board sympathized with the request to change the shower procedure and now requires a note instead.

She said the school has a modified dress code and requires girls to wear uniforms for health reasons.

"We are afraid the girls would be found all day long in the same outfits they wore for gym class," Mrs. Ridenour said.

And of Mrs. Lockhart, she added: "The same parent who brought in the ACLU complains about everything."

Mrs. Lockhart declined comment.

3♠	Pass	6♠

The most difficult play in bridge — and it doesn't matter how good or bad a player one is — is the opening lead. It is often true that more contracts are lost as a result of the wrong opening lead than on all the ensuing plays combined.

It is impossible to formulate a blanket rule for opening leads. The leader has only his 13 cards and the bidding to go on — and these vary so much from one deal to the next that sometimes one must simply take a stab at the best lead.

However, the leader can occasionally make a good educated guess in hands where his lead is not entirely automatic. Rule number one is to try to beat the contract. Most of the thinking about opening leads stems from this one rule.

Examine West's problem in this deal. He has a right to assume on the bidding that South has the king of spades and that he will therefore score his A-Q and defeat the slam. However, West should not bet his life on this probability.

If he makes the "safe" lead of the jack of clubs, he will wind up taking second money if declarer plays his trumps properly.

West's best opening lead is the ace of trumps! This does not affect the outcome if it turns out that South has the king, but at the same time it increases the chance of defeating the contract if dummy has it.

In the actual deal, when dummy shows up with the king, West continues with a low trump. Declarer can now make the slam by gauging the opening lead correctly and taking a finesse. But in practice, he is more likely to conclude that West led from the A-5 than the A-Q-5, and if he goes up with dummy's king he goes down.

Let us not forget the trying Winter of '77

The Staffer

By Nancy Hicks

When my children complain that the sidewalk is too hot for bare feet, that it is really a four Popsicle day, that if God had wanted children to wear clothes he wouldn't have made a Nebraska summer . . . it's then I remind them of the Winter of '77.

For that winter was cold — so cold that our heat bill for December topped the Christmas credit card bill. It was so cold that my long underwear shivered — inside the house.

The whole winter, as I recall, was relentlessly frigid. But there was one memorable weekend when the weather, Lady Luck and modern equipment combined to push our household back to the sod hut era.

It was a January Sunday, and despite a sunny sky, the red line of the thermometer was shorter than my temper.

Bundled up, three sweaters each, we drove the windy stretch to church, but not back again. Sometime during the prayers and songs, one worn tire gave out.

We thumbed a ride home, only to discover that our never too aggressive furnace was not keeping pace with the arctic chill. Inside the air was a nippy 54 degrees.

So the sweaters and mittens stayed on as we set about our afternoon activities.

Daughter Five — an iceberg herself — immune to the below zero air, put on her coat and went out to find a playmate. Instead she discovered a fact of nature — warm tongues and ice cold metal railings do not mix.

Scared and bloody, but much wiser, she retired under a sleeping bag for a nap.

Mama then sat down at the family typewriter for a few hours of silent correspondence. During the first letter to a host of families whose last names all begin with H, that very key of the typewriter flew off the stem and disappeared in the carpet.

Frustrated and frigid, Mama crept under another sleeping bag, cursing the inconveniences of modern life; meanwhile the animals of the house curled atop every hot air duct.

Papa's afternoon project was the repair of a long broken light switch. But Papa is more at home in the chlorinator room of a swimming pool than in the wiring business. While the switch appeared all fixed, downstairs in the basement the switch box quietly hummed.

And at 9:10 p.m. the smell of electrical smoke drifted through the house. There was no fire, only a very hot switch box. Within a few seconds every switch in the house quit operation. Any light that was on at 9:10 was on forever; any light that was off, was permanently off.

We bathed in blackness and snacked by candlelight. And still leery of the electrical fire smell, I gathered up everything precious — two small children, all picture albums, one box of very old love letters — and set up a bedroom on the living room floor next to the front door.

The next morning a professional electrician returned our light switches to normal and discovered the source of our heating problem. Family cat prancing through the air ducts had blocked off most of them. We were sending as much hot air to the garage as we were to the house.

For the price of one winter house call we returned to the light and heat of the 20th century.

The typewriter is still at the repair shop waiting for an H.

Which should have priority, Rose Bowl or a new baby?

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am expecting a baby, and Jan. 1 is my due date. When I told my husband, he said, "Gee, that's tough because I've already ordered tickets for the Rose Bowl game." (He and three of his buddies always go to the game.)

I told him he shouldn't plan on going next year, but he says he'll make plans to go, and if I'm not in labor when it's time for him to leave for the game, he'll go. If I am, he'll cancel his plans and sell his ticket.

Abby, when I had our first baby, my water broke and the baby was born within a few hours.

I want my husband with me through everything. Don't you think being with me should be more important to him that a football game?

My mother lives nearby and she could take me to the hospital, but I still want my husband there. What to you think?

MARRIED TO A FINK

DEAR MARRIED: The Rose Bowl game is an annual event. Having a baby (I presume) is not. Also, the game will be televised, so he could "see" it and be with you, too.

I say the birth of the baby takes precedence over the Rose Bowl game. And if your husband complains, kick him in the end zone.

DEAR ABBY: This is not a question, but a piece of information that could save many lives.

NEVER go to sleep with the TV turned on. (And caution children who have TV's in their rooms to be sure the set is turned off before they go to sleep.)

The other evening my son was watching TV in his bedroom when the smoke began to pour from the set. He quickly turned it off and came to our room. But the time we got back to his room with the fire extinguisher, flames were shooting out of the bottom of the set and noxious fumes from burning insulation and plastic began to fill the room.

We put out the fire with the fire extinguisher, but it took a long time (even with the windows open) to clear the air of the fumes.

If our son, who is a very sound sleeper, had been asleep when this occurred, he probably would have died of smoke inhalation before we became aware of the problem. The set was not old or worn. We later learned it had defective wiring.

This may not be a very common occurrence, but if it happened to us, it could happen to others, and on the chance that it could save just one life I think it deserves space in your widely read column.

ROSEMARY S., PLACITAS, N.M.

DEAR ROSEMARY: I agree. Thanks for your concern.

For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send $1 to Abigail Van Buren, 132 Lasky Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. Please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (24¢) envelope.

Japan cornering calculator market

Washington (AP) — The Commerce Department said that American calculator manufacturers are losing their hold on the U.S. market in the face of growing competition from Japan.

It said the major factor in the change has been "the improvement in Japanese calculator semiconductor technology."

What happens if they eliminate pennies?

It's Your Money

By
Jane Bryant Quinn

New York — The U.S. government is proving the adage: penny-wise, pound-foolish. It's thinking about abolishing the one-cent coin, to save the Treasury the cost of making it — but at enormous potential cost to the rest of us.

The Treasury's case is this: Demand for pennies is growing rapidly. Unless something is done, a new mint will have to be built in Denver at a cost of $65 million. If pennies were abolished — replaced, perhaps by two-cents coins — we would not only save the cost of the new mint but also millions of dollars in metals, personnel, shipping and storage.

But what happens to consumer prices if pennies are eliminated? It may be true that nothing costs a penny anymore, but this has no bearing on the importance of pennies in commerce.

Millions of items carry price tags that end in one, three, five, seven or nine cents. If only two-cent pieces existed, the majority of those prices would probably be increased a penny.

It's possible that half the prices might be rounded down a penny, so as to give the merchants the same profit margin they had before the change in coinage. But the temptation to "round up" by just a silly penny would probably be irresistible.

Anti-penny people argue that prices may not, in fact, change. Grocery stores might, for example, continue to use odd prices, then add a penny to the final bill if the total didn't come to an even number. But it seems more likely that all items would soon carry price tags ending in two, four, six or eight cents.

If every man, woman and child in the United States paid only 10 cents more a week because of prices being rounded up a penny, the annual cost would come to $1.1 billion — enough to build 17 Denver mints.

And that's not all. Future price increases doubtlessly would be made at least two cents at a time, rather than going up only a penny. Some prices might come down, of course. The merchant who wants to advertise dresses under $20 will have to use $19.98 instead of $19.99. But that's small potatoes compared with the overall potential for increases.

Other coins have been successfully abolished in our history. Half-cent, two-cent and three-cent coins were struck at various times in the 19th century. But when they were abandoned, they had already fallen into disuse.

The penny, by contrast, is America's most popular coin. Millions of people save pennies in piggybanks, glass jars, and coin collections. All told, some 31% of the coins minted have been taken out of circulation by savers. Another 10% are lost or abandoned. But the remainder continue to circulate.

Some 11 billion pennies were minted last year. At present rates of demand, 12 billion to 15 billion will be needed by 1980, and 25 billion by 1990. The vast majority of all the coins in circulation are pennies.

Abolishing pennies isn't the only way out of the Treasury's cost dilemma. The government could switch to aluminum cents, because more of them can be made on the same equipment.

The last time this idea came up, it was roundly defeated by lobbyists for the vending machine industry. But their claim to consideration should surely take second place to that of consumers at large.

Another course is to mint some two-cent coins along with pennies, and make proportionately fewer pennies. Then, no price changes would be needed.

No good estimates have yet been made as to how much it would cost consumers if pennies were abolished. This important question will be examined next year by the House Subcommittee on Coinage, headed by Walter Fauntroy (D-D.C.), who is worried about the inflationary aspect. There's also a political angle. How, after all, will Americans react if Congress makes them give up their most beloved coin?

Young man sleeps in courthouse

Allegan, Mich. (UPI) — Jason Alan Watts sleeps most of the day behind a desk in the Allegan County courthouse.

No one seems to mind, though, since he's not on the public payroll. And if he awakes, his mother, Register of Deeds Joyce Watts, is nearby.

"He's happier here than he is at home," Mrs. Watts said of her 3-month-old son. She brings him to the office every day.

"With the typewriters and cash registers and people coming in and out, he sleeps more soundly than at home, unless there is a war movie on TV," she said.

Mrs. Watts, a former teacher and dental assistant in this community near Lake Michigan, was elected to the office last November. She didn't know it, but she was pregnant at the time, and on March 21, she gave birth two months prematurely.

"Because he was premature, the doctors encouraged me to breast feed so he would have a better chance against lung infections and could build up immunities," she said.

"The only way I could accomplish that and keep my position was to bring him to the office. So far it has worked out pretty well."

She said her husband, an attorney, also enjoys the arrangement.

"He usually stops in at noon and the three of us have lunch together in my office. It's great, because if the baby gets fussy, Papa can jump in."

The baby sleeps most of the day in a portable crib in a private office off the main work room. "If he has trouble getting to sleep, typing helps. Or I take him into the vault room and talk to him. The people in the office wish he'd cry more so they can hold him."

While she says many mothers have jobs that would not permit them to bring their children along, she thinks it's a great idea and strongly recommends it.

"If and when he becomes more demanding and it begins infringing on the job, I'll put him in a daycare center or hire a babysitter," she said.

"But for now, I know he's getting the best care possible. And I'd hate to miss seeing him during his happy times. His first smile was during office hours."

Islands have splendid tropical weather, no industry

Postcard

By Stan Delaplane

Arorangi — John said: "When the missionary first arrived — in the old days in the Cook Islands — he told the king of Rarotonga about God. The king pointed to the island god of stone.

"He said: 'There is my god. Where is yours?'

"The missionary pointed to the sky: 'Up there.'

"So the king peeked and peeked but he saw nothing."

John said: "That is why they call this village Arorangi. It means, 'peek in the sky'."

John is my driver. Rarotonga is only 20 miles around. He doesn't have to do much driving.

There's no industry on the 15 islands of the Cook group. "We ship bananas and pineapple to New Zealand. Some pearl shell. But we have no boats to fish out beyond the reef."

Rarotonga does have splendid tropical weather. The blue South Pacific water is usually 72 degrees. The morning air is 72 today — it's winter down here. The maid complained:

"Very cold day."

The new agreement of nations to extend fishing rights 200 miles from shore could change the Cooks.

Sir Albert Henry, premier since independence in 1965, said:

"Now our waters are being swept by Korean boats. They take the tuna catch back to Pago Pago (American Samoa) to be canned by Starkist."

"If they have to fish 200 miles from our shores, then it would be better for them to move their canneries here."

Pay here is $20 a week — (a few managers get $25) — and there's a 10% income tax.

Except for what they raise and fish, the islands must import from New Zealand.

The canned food selection in the largest store is less than you'd find in a neighborhood papa-mama store in the States.

But a new tourist hotel has been built — 103 rooms. Air New Zealand began a route from the U.S. Six hours direct from Honolulu.

A travel agent said: "I don't think most tourists will take more than three days here. But I think I could set up a triangle tour: Tahiti, Rarotonga, Fiji, Honolulu."

☆ ☆ ☆

"The fishing would help," said Sir Albert while Lady Henry — (he refers to her as "Mama") — served us homemade gingerbread.

There's a catch. "In the middle of the 1880s, all the big powers were looking for guano islands." (Where seabirds have dropped digested fish for a million years. The best fertilizer in the world.)

"The French got some. The Germans and British had warships down here. Finally they all made a treaty. Part of it gave America the right to buy a half dozen of our islands. Any time. Forever."

If the U.S. did this now, it would secure the tuna fishing waters. Sir Albert thinks they won't.

☆ ☆ ☆

Meantime, he hopes travelers' checks will flow down from American banks. Buying white sand beach and warm blue water.

To rent bicycles. Buy cans of New Zealand beer (30 cents). Scotch whisky (60 cents). And rooms at the Rarotongan ($28 a day double).

It's probably the lowest priced island in the South Seas.

Rarontonga was discovered by the mutineers of HMS Bounty after they pushed Captain Bligh over the side. They didn't stop. Kept right on going to Tahiti.

Reader likes listening to all-night talk show

By Joanne Farris

Life Begins At Forty

DEAR JOANNE FARRIS: Your recent mention of Herb Jepko's all-night radio program reminded me to tell your readers about the good all-night talk show that we get on our Mutual radio station.

John Nebel is his name. He pioneered radio talk shows in New York 15 years ago, and now he's on from midnight to 5:30 a.m., originating in New York. He takes phone calls from all over the nation, too, and anyone who is wakeful in those hours can give him a listen, and a call, too.

I drive at night, and I like to listen to John because he is fun and I learn a lot. Signed: L. T., Harrisburg, Pa.

ANSWER: Thanks for the good information for all the night-owls who read this column!

DEAR JOANNE FARRIS: My mother is 88. She lives nearby with my sister and her husband. I am 64, a widow for five years, and I live alone.

Mother is losing her memory, and I get scared when I see how disconcerted she gets when she realizes what she's forgotten. I almost cry when she asks my sister and me where her "little girls are," or "when she's going home," and she never remembers what she has eaten when she eats alone. It seems to me that she just does not care what she eats, though she has a good appetite.

One way we've been having fun is to make a mini-party out of every get-together. Even if it's just a snack or coffee, tea, or a soda, Mother loves the party part.

As I watch her I am developing habits to help me to not forget. I have a special place for my keys, and I always put them there as soon as I walk into my apartment. I have one scratch pad on which I "message" myself, reminding me of calls to make, letters to write, bills to pay, etc. One drawer in my desk is the stamp drawer.

I'm writing because I think other readers may be pleasantly surprised, as I was, at how much tension I have taken out of my life by these simple habits I've cultivated. They're just automatic, now; I don't have to think about them.

One more habit I like is putting an item on my grocery list the minute I open the last package or can or bottle of it. That way I don't have to shop often and almost never have an "emergency" when I just "have to" go to the store right away. Signed R. M., Lakeland, Fla.

ANSWER: How wise you are to develop habits that ease tension. All of us, I guess, have little ways we help ourselves. I'm grateful that you've shared yours with us.

I don't want to let June pass without reminding readers to take precautions to avoid insect stings. Eight persons out of every 1,000 are allergic to stings, and four are severely sensitive to them. More epople die each year from stings than from snake bites.

Avoid stings by not going barefoot. Don't wear bright colors; they attract bees. Wear long sleeves and long pants in the garden or on a hike. Don't strike out at a bee or wasp that comes buzzing. Retreat slowly or stand still. It's important to stay calm.

If you do get stung and you're allergic, get to a doctor or hospital fast. You'll need an immediate injection of epinephrine.

Pre-dawn fire devastates Oskaloosa, Iowa, city block

Oskaloosa, Iowa (UPI) — Damage was estimated at more than $1 million Wednesday following a pre-dawn fire which devastated a city block just west of downtown and destroyed a lumberyard, a house, an apartment building and another building.

Six residents of the two houses escaped the flames, authorities said, and no injuries were reported.

Fire officials blamed the dry weather and lumberyard stock for the rapid spread of the blaze which began in the Hawkeye Lumber Co. about 5 a.m. No cause was immediately known for the fire.

"We had four rooms of asphalt products for roofing and we carry a lot of plywood that has glue that will burn quickly. We had a whole carload of that sitting in the alley," said Claude Branttner, lumberyard auditor.

"It's completely gone," he said, "The loss, I would say, is well over $1 million."

The building also contained cases of highly combustible products such as paint and varnish.

$25 a day spent abroad

Washington (UPI) — The average American who traveled out of the country last year — almost 7 million people — spent 24 days abroad and $25 a day, the Commerce Department said.

Those 7 million who chose the nation's bicentennial year for foreign travel were partially offset by millions of tourists from abroad, particularly Western Europe and Japan, who visited the United States.

The number of overseas visitors climbed by 20% last year to 4.5 million persons, according to a department study, while the 6.9 million Americans traveling abroad represented an 8% increase over 1975.

The study said Americans spent $2.7 billion more overseas than foreign tourists spent in this country last year. The number of European visitors increased by 26% last year to 1.9 million. They spent $900 million, 40% more than the year before.

Chagall still paints; to turn 90

Nice, France (AP) — Marc Chagall, who says, "If you don't work, you start to die," turns 90 on July 7 still hard at work expanding an artistic legacy of amazing variety.

To mark the event, some of the world's greatest musicians will perform a public concert in honor of the painter, one of the 20th century masters, and an expanded collection will be inaugurated at the Marc Chagall Biblical Message Museum.

The concert in this southern French city was the inspiration of cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, like Chagall a Russian exile.

Rostropovich and his wife, soprano Galina Vishnevskaya, will be joined by violinist Isaac Stern and flutist Jean Pierre Rampal in performing with the National Orchestra for a black-tie audience.

The artist, who resides and works in nearby St. Paul de Vence, will be accompanied at the concert by his wife, Vava, his daughter, Ida, and three grandchildren.

"He works with music on at all times, so I can see no nicer way to say 'Happy Birthday' than to play music for him," Stern said in Jerusalem.

At the museum, a major tourist attraction here, 26 new oil paintings on Biblical themes will be added to the present collection of 17 oils and 39 gouaches. Chagall has devoted more than 40 years to Biblical themes and two of the big new works — produced in the past 10 years — depict the Prodigal Son and Job.

Ten years ago, as if to forecast that he was moving into a major creative period of his life, Chagall banned all fanfare and public recognition of his 80th birthday.

Since then he has designed:

—Three monumental tapestries, "The Creation," "The Exodus" and "The Entry into Jerusalem," for the Israeli parliament house.

—A 70-foot-long pastel mosaic for the First National Bank plaza in Chicago.

—Three stained-glass windows for the 12th century cathedral at Rheims, where Joan of Arc crowned Charles VII as king of France. The three windows marked the end of 50 years of restoration after damage during World War I.

—A series of lithographs for a limited edition of Shakespeare's "Tempest."

—Illustrations for a book by the French poet Louis Aragon and a book by Andre Malraux on the Spanish civil war, and a stained-glass window for a church in Saarburg, West Germany.

"You have to work while you're alive, because if you don't work you start to die," he said during an appearance at the museum during the past year.

Many of Chagall's works, gracing public buildings throughout the world, are brightly colored, deceptively primitive depictions of dream-like scenes, often showing young lovers or farm animals floating through air.

He especially favors the lover motif. "I seek out quality like a bride seeks love," he told a recent interviewer. "Quality and love are the same thing and I am very strong for love."

Classics back on their backs for school days

New York (UPI) — A strong classic trend dominates back-to-school fashions: Plaid kilts, bulky nordic and heathery colors in sweaters, argyle vests, fringed challis shawls and plastic ponchos that fold into tiny pouches.

This was the message from Seventeen magazine's 25th annual fall trends fashion show that opened recently in New York City. It will be performed in nine other cities in August.

Legwarmers, eyelet petticoats, short rubber boots and knit mittens linked by long strings were also featured.

Look for letter sweaters, jumpers, knickers, big plaid shirts and camisole blouses, too.

For outerwear, there are blouson shaped jackets and sherpa-lined three-quarter length coats.

Following the trend for women, evening clothes include lots of full, tiered skirts, flounces, lace and ruffles.

Lawn and garden tips. Local nurserymen write columns in the "Sunday Journal and Star." They tell you when to plant, how to care for your lawn and garden plants.

Mother, flag, apple pie is cause for celebration

Brownwood, Tex. (AP) — When folks here decided to get back to "basic beliefs," they handed out flags, called in Anita Bryant and launched Brownwood's first annual Freedom Week, devoted strictly to "brotherhood, motherhood and apple pie."

"I started studying these rock festivals," said funeral home owner Groner Pitts. "I may not agree with what goes on there but, by golly, they are well organized. I said we ought to do something like that."

Pitts' idea took hold, and before long a 400-member committee was formed in Brownwood, a town of 18,000 persons about halfway between San Angelo and Waco in the heart of Texas.

"We figured it was time that a little town in Texas went back to the basic beliefs," said Pitts. "It may sound corny, by golly, but I'm going to be honest. This week is for motherhood, brotherhood and apple pie," Pitts said. "this is the greatest country in the world. I don't know anyone trying to get out, but I know there's a lot of people trying to get in."

To kick things off, Brownwood's Little Leaguers distributed American flags to residents during the past week. The festivities will continue through Sunday night, winding up with Miss Bryant's appearance.

Work has started on a 10-foot hole to hold a giant skyrocket called the brocade crown chrysanthemum, which was made by a Fort Worth firm for Friday night's fireworks show.

"It's the biggest fireworks shell that's going to be shot this year," said Pitts. "It's 260 pounds and it goes up 2,000 feet before going off. We have to drill a hole in the ground 10 feet deep to get the dadgum thing in."

Pitts said it didn't take long to choose Miss Bryant as headline performer. Businessmen and other citizens donated funds to meet her $7,500 fee.

N.Y. alters pot criminal penalties

Albany, N.Y. (UPI) — Gov. Hugh Carey's promised signature is the only thing needed now to make New york the ninth state to decriminalize possession of marijuana.

Final legislative approval of a bill to remove criminal sanctions of possession of marijuana came early Wednesday in the Senate by a vote of 32-28, only one more than the number needed for passage.

The measure, which won assembly approval Monday by only three votes, would make possession of ⅞ of an ounce or less of marijuana a violation similar to a speeding ticket, with penalties of up to $100. Sponsors said ⅞ of an ounce would make about 30-40 "joints of pot."

The gift or sale of up to two grams, estimated to be one cigarette, would be a misdemeanor — giving the suspect a criminal record — with penalties of up to three months in jail or a $1,000 fine. Possession or sale of larger quantities would carry greater penalties, up to 15 years in jail for holding more than 10 pounds.

Shackles, daylight, courtroom change picture for 4 inmates

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

The inmates, the police, the news media, the County-City Building.

All of the elements which made a national event Monday night, mixed again Wednesday but the script had been changed.

Shackles, the light of day and the Lancaster County Court room changed the picture for Donald Routhier, Robert Parker, Robert Bessent and Marvin Gerheardt, the four inmates who held two hostages at knifepoint for nearly seven hours Monday night in an unsuccessful escape attempt from the city jail.

In the aftermath of the first escape involving hostages, it was the law's turn to steal the show. County Attorney Ron Lahners was the star in Judge Robert Camp's court as he read three felony counts against each of the four, who could face up to 110 years, each, in the Nebraska Penal Complex for their Monday night performance.

Routhier was first, as Lahners read the charges, two counts of being an inmate detaining another, each punishable by terms of 10 to 50 years in prison; and one count of using a dangerous weapon to commit a felony, punishable by three to 10 years in prison.

"Do you understand the charges filed against you?" Lahners asked.

"I hear the charges, but you can't charge me according to the paper you gave me the other night," Routhier, the alleged spokesman during the Monday incident, replied.

Lahners repeated his question and Routhier said, "Yeh."

Camp explained that the inmate had the right to represented by an attorney, and asked if he wanted court-appointed counsel.

"I want (deputy public defender) Toney Redman," Routhier replied.

Bessent, 23; Gerheardt, 32 and Parker, 24, repeated the same procedure, although they limited their remarks to a simple "yes" and "no." The three are charged with the same felonies and face the same punishment.

And, like Routhier, they all asked for Toney Redman, even though the young attorney said he has no idea why, and that he has never talked to any of the four.

Public Defender Clement Gaughn expressed surprise that they asked for Toney, but said, "They'll probably get him if they want him."

The court appearance was over in a matter of minutes, and the four were escorted out of the room by five Lancaster County deputy sheriffs and five Lincoln policemen.

Routhier attempted to hand a letter to a woman outside the courtroom, but wasn't allowed to do so. Police later said it was a letter to his girlfriend (apparently the woman) and that it was given to her after it had been read by officials.

Routhier, Bessent and Gerheardt were returned to the penal complex where they had been transferred late Tuesday afternoon. Parker was returned to a cell in the city jail.

Lahners explained that the trio had posed the "greatest threat to security in the jail" and were thus transferred out. Routhier and Bessent were due to begin serving time at the prison for their part in the robbery of two clerks at the Congress Inn Motel, 2001 West O, earlier this year. Gerheardt was awaiting trial in District court on a burglary charge and Parker was in federal custody on a grand larceny charge.

Their next joint court appearance will be July 12, at 9 a.m. when Camp will set preliminary hearings on the charges filed Wednesday. The status of federal charges — expected to be filed because one of the hostages was a deputy U.S. marshal, 36-year-old Jack Douglas — is still unknown.

Lahners said he would seek to "prosecute the four to the fullest extent of the law" because of the nature of the incident. "There will be no plea bargaining," and the sentences will run consecutively, he added. Bond had been set at $50,000 for each of the men.

Lahners explained that the "paper" Routhier mentioned was a statement from Assistant Police Chief Roger LaPage stating that he (LaPage) wouldn't press charges against the men. LaPage later explained that he has no authority to file charges.

The paper, which Lahners said was signed "under extremely coercive circumstances," was not a valid document. He said that Lincoln attorney Murry J. Shaeffer and Police Lt. Lee Wagner had also signed the document.

Asked about the tight security, and the fact that the men were led on the route usually taken by prisoners from the jail to the courtroom (instead of in a back door), Lahners said it was to "protect them from themselves." He noted that they remained shackled at the agreement of the court.

Developers told county to require water reports

By Bob Reeves
Star Staff Writer

A regulation which may stave off battles over groundwater in Lancaster County began seeping into effect this week.

The county board won't approve the measure until next week, but Tuesday the commissioners gave the go-ahead to developers seeking subdivision permits to begin complying with it.

By an amendment to the county's subdivision regulations, the board intends to require a report by "a registered professional engineer with collaboration by a graduate geologist with a major in hydrology" to accompany each plat application.

Copies of the report must be filed with the Conservation and Survey Division of the University of Nebraska for review, the draft amendment states.

Preparation of the amendment has held up applications for three subdivision permits: Pawnee Estates, on W. Fletcher St.; Savage Acres, at 84th and Davey Road; and Finnigan's subdivision at 84th and Waverly Road.

The engineer's report must describe the chemical quality of the water supply and the flow in gallons per minute from test wells. It must also tell how far underground the water is, what kind of strata bears the water, and provide an inventory of wells on adjacent property.

State Geologist Vince Dreeszen, who helped prepare the amendment, admits that no study can be 100% sure. No engineer's report can give a guarantee over several years that water will still be there, he said.

"This same kind of appraisal is required of any village or city," Dreeszen said.

In past years, this would have been a prohibitive requirement in Nebraska because there were so few water consultants available, he noted.

Engineers are plentiful now, but they're not cheap. The cost of complying with the county's amendment could run a developer anywhere from $4,000 to $8,000, Dreeszen said.

These costs presumably would be passed along to homebuyers.

Besides measuring the depth and flow of the water, the engineer must report the rate at which the water level goes down while pumping.

A well must maintain a rapid enough recharge to take care of peak demands, Dreeszen explained. Many rural wells can deliver enough water for a family per day, but not enough when everybody in the family wants to use it at once.

There have been isolated cases of wells running dry in recent months, but these can often be discounted, Dreeszen noted. Sometimes what appears to be a dry well is really a faulty pump or a well that is improperly maintained.

The board's amendment is designed to help prevent the kinds of water fights that are actually beginning to occur in some western states.

The availability of groundwater will limit population growth so long as people have to rely on wells rather than long-distance transfer of water.

City-County Planning Director Doug Brogden explained that some water problems are arising because development in being encouraged in areas where groundwater supplies are poor.

The Comprehensive Plan calls for growth to the west and north, where underground water is scarce or salty. Other environmental considerations take precedence over water availability in planning, Brogden said.

Lincoln's water system does not extend beyond the city limits.

One of the best water supplies in the country is south of Hickman, underneath the site of the Norris School complex, Dreeszen said.

But no truly accurate map of groundwater supplies is available, Brogden cautioned. This is part of the reason for the amendment.

High court rules on negligence in snowstorms

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

Although it was hot and sunny Wednesday, the Nebraska Supreme Court apparently had its mind on snowstorms.

The high court reversed two decisions on cases stemming from accidents during snowstorms. In each case, a vehicle was stuck in the snow on a hill when another vehicle collided with it.

The court ordered a new trial in a Holt County case involving LaVerne Overweg and George Van Conet, who were involved in an accident in February 1971.

Van Conet's truck was being pulled from a snowdrift on U.S. 281 about nine miles north of St. Paul when Overweg's tractor-trailer collided with it.

A lower court ruled Overweg was guilty of negligence for not keeping a proper lookout that would have allowed him to stop before hitting Van Conet's truck. Van Conet received a summary judgment in his favor.

But the Supreme Court ruled that both drivers were negligent, since Van Conet did not set out flares or lights to warn appraoching traffic that his truck was blocking the road. A jury should decide who was more negligent, the high court ruled.

In another case, however, the court ruled that the driver of a car left abandoned on a roadside in a snowdrift was not negligent when his auto was struck by another car.

Stan Vrba's car became stuck on a Thurston County road on the night of February 4, 1975 and he walked home. The next morning, Ronny Kelly collided with Vrba's car.

Kelly said he was driving 25 or 30 miles per hour and visibility was only about 50 feet because of blowing snow.

The high court said Kelly was driving too fast to be able to keep a proper lookout and thus was negligent. But Vrba was not negligent ecause he had parked as far to the right as possible and it was impossible for him to provide a clear view of the car during the snowstorm, the court noted.

The high court ordered Thurston County District Court to render a judgment in favor of Vrba.

Commission must clear up disclosure law misinformation

By Don Walton
Star Staff Writer

Members of the Nebraska Political Accountability and Disclosure Commission agreed Wednesday that one of their first tasks will be the need to clear up misunderstandings about the financial disclosure provisions of the new "sunshine law."

The law becomes fully effective Friday, but the first disclosure statements are not due until April 1, 1978.

It was the "sunshine law" which created the Accountability and Disclosure Commission.

Both the public and officeholders seem to have received "all kinds of misinformation" about financial disclosure requirements, commission Chairman Mimi Waldbaum of Omaha said.

Wally Peterson of Lincoln, chairman of a subcommittee on financial interest reporting, said he is aware of all kinds of "wild stories" about disclosure sections of the law.

Despite common misunderstanding, Peterson noted, officeholders and candidates are not required to attach any dollar value to their sources of income or financial holdings.

And financial disclosure provisions of the law do not apply to as many candidates or officeholders as campaign reporting requirements in the act, he said.

Peterson suggested that the commission consult the attorney general's office for a legal opinion on exactly what the law requires from whom in terms of financial disclosure, then make that information available to candidates and officeholders in printed form.

Disclosure seems to the portio of the sunshine act which is most "worrisome" to those covered by its provisions, Peterson noted.

Secretary of State Allen Beermann said inquiries directed to his office have centered on the need to define how much of a spouse's financial interests must be disclosed and what the law means by "indirect" sources of wealth.

Ms. Waldbaum said she has been contacted by people who seem to fear that they may be subject to robbery if they reveal a list of all their holdings.

In other action, the commission named Ms. Waldbaum, Peterson and Mickey Staley of Omaha to screen applications for the post of commission executive director.

CBer Rice loses appeal of manslaughter conviction

Clyde Rice, whose argument over a citizens' band radio channel resulted in the death of a Greenwood man, lost his bid for a lighter sentence from the Nebraska Supreme Court.

Rice was convicted in April 1976 of manslaughter for running over Don Edelman with a pickup truck. The two men had been arguing over the use of a CB radio channel and met in the Veterans of Foreign Wars parking lot to settle their differences.

Although the original charge was first degree murder, a Lancaster County District Court jury reduced the charge to manslaughter. Rice was sentenced to two years in the Nebraska Penal Complex.

In his appeal to the high court, Rice contended his sentence was excessive. His attorneys contended Rice was borderline mentally retarded and had no criminal record.

But the high court refused to lighten the sentence, saying the penalty was well within the district court's discretion. Manslaughter is punishable in the state by prison terms ranging from one to 10 years, the high court noted.

"The evidence is overwhelming that (Rice) is guilty of a violent crime which caused the death of another," the high court said. A sentence of probation could depreciate the seriousness of the crime, the court added.

Three other criminal appeals from Lancaster District Court were also upheld by the high court Wednesday.

The court denied an appeal from Michael Frederick, who was sentenced last August to 18 months to three years in prison for passing an insufficient fund check.

Freddie M. Schoneweis lost his appeal of a driving with .10% alcohol in the blood conviction in which he was fined $100 and lost his license for six months. He had argued he should have been put on probation.

James Adams lost an appeal of a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Adams received 30 days in jail and lost his license for one year, but thought he should have received probation.

In each case, the high court noted that the sentences were well within the discretionary limits given to courts by state statutes, and would not be overturned.

Wade stuns Evert to earn finals spot

Wimbledon (UPI) — Britain's Virginia Wade, conquering her center court nerves for the first time in 16 years, hustled Chris Evert out of her normal game Wednesday to defeat the top seed and reigning champion, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1, and reach the women's singles final of the $373,440 Wimbledon Championships.

Betty Stove upset hometown hopes of an all-British final in the tournament's 100th year by beating Sue Barker, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4, to become the first Dutch player to reach a singles final here.

The final will be played Friday in front of Queen Elizabeth, who dislikes tennis but has agreed to mark the occasion by her presence anyway.

The two semifinals represented the crests and troughs of women's tennis. Wade and Evert played an enthralling match which lasted just under two hours and which the British player, 32 next month, won by attacking at every opportunity.

Her first service — the hardest in the women's game — clicked three times out of four and she followed it up with a display of all-court aggression which broke up Evert's rhythmic baseline style.

The world No. 1 fluffed an unusually high number of forehands and afterwards said she was not aggressive enough either mentally or physically.

"I was on the defensive the whole time and I couldn't reach deep down inside of me and pull out what I needed to win. I just didn't have it," she said.

Stove's match with Barker was a flat and tedious 90-minute affair littered with unforced errors with the 32-year-old Dutch player winning only because her opponent made more than she did — which was a lot.

Wade first entered Wimbledon in 1961 but on each occasion, and especially on her two previous semifinal appearances, her nerves have let her down.

This year she promised it would be different, and it was.

"There is always this balance of determination and tension at Wimbledon but as long as you are determined enough there is no problem," said Wade.

She raced to 3-0 in the first set, which was not exceptional because Evert is always a slow starter, but when the St. Lauderdale player doublefaulted on game point to trail 0-4; the crowd sensed the beginning of an upset.

She was too far behind to save the set which Wade won on service, but after an exchange of service breaks in the second set Evert went ahead 4-3 on the Briton's serve and held on to the advantage to win it.

Wade held her service in the opening game of the final set but only because of some fine sportsmanship by Evert, who persuaded the umpire to call a double bounce against herself when he had thought it was all right.

Wade followed this up with one of the best games of the match. She pounced on one of Evert's few miscalculated drop shots to hit a winner and then at 15-40 Evert went long with a backhand.

The match was over and Evert, as she said later, couldn't find anything to dig herself out of trouble.

The Queen's view of tennis was reinforced by Stove and Barker in the following semifinal.

Barker paid the penalty for a weak first service and would have been beaten in two sets if it hadn't been for Stove serving 10 double faults herself.

The final set saw Stove leading 4-2 but he blonde Briton had four break points to come back on Stove's service in the next game and missed all of them.

Stove, women's doubles champion here five years ago, didn't seem to be hampered by her bandaged right knee as much as by her right elbow, which twice got in the way of what should have been easy match winning volleys. Eventually it was forehand error by Barker which won Stove the match — a suitable relfaction on a disappointing semifinal.

Wade said Stove would be a difficult opponent because "she's so erratic." Stove said Wade would be tough because "she's so confident."

Wade said she would not feel more nervous Friday just because the Queen would be watching.

"The Queen doesn't care too much for tennis but maybe we can show her that she should," Wade said with a parting smile.

Fidrych flies to 6th in row

Detroit (UPI) — Mark Fidrych won his sixth straight game with a nine-hitter Wednesday night, helping the Detroit Tigers score a 7-2 victory over Boston for the Red Sox sixth straight loss.

Detroit's largest crowd of the season, 51,745, saw Detroit score two runs in the second and third innings off loser Bill Lee and then watched Fidrych run his record to 6-2 since returning from knee surgery.

"The Bird" gave up his first home run in 67 innings when Butch Hobson hit his 13th with one out in the seventh. Denny Doyle walked and scored on singles by Rick Burleson and Fred Lynn before Fidrych choked off the rally.

Jason Thompson doubled after rookie Steve Kemp walked in the second to set up the first two Tiger runs. Both scored on infield outs.

Thompson hit a two-run homer.

The Tigers have won four straight, their longest winning streak of the season and the crowd was the second largest ever to see Fidrych pitch at home.

Don't panic, Big Red fans

You haven't received your season tickets for Nebraska's home football games next fall yet?

Your neighbor got his two weeks ago and his name is Swanson and your name is Jones. You begin to wonder what kind of an alphabet the university is using.

If you're like several thousand other Big Red fans, you've phoned the ticket office to find out what's going on.

What's going on, according to NU ticket manager Helen Ruth Wagner, is the painstaking task of processing nearly 40,000 season ticket orders — checking and cross-checking each one to see that they are properly filled.

"We do have a system — one that has been carefully worked out over the years — even if some people don't seem to think so," Wagner jokes, still able to chuckle among all the headaches.

"Without going into all the details, the basic system is to fill the orders by sections," she explains. "The alphabet has nothing to do with it. We have boxes and boxes of unfilled orders yet to process. But we're mailing out quite a batch every day. The last tickets should be in the mail within the next two weeks."

So the word is, relax. That's hard for most Big Red fans to do when a cool breeze blows through town on a summer day. It feels like kickoff time.

Snake unusual hazard for Lincoln gals

By Virgil Parker
Sports Editor

Everyone is aware of the normal hazards on a golf course — out of bounds, lateral water and sand traps.

But one threesome in the Lincoln City Women's Golf Championships at Pioneers Golf Course encountered a new hazard Wednesday morning — a three-foot snake on the 13th green.

Betty Abel reached for a rule book. "I wanted to know what to do if it swallowed by ball," she said with a laugh.

"The snake was just lying out there enjoying a sun bath," Willis Jones observed. "We threw things at it, but we had to wait about five minutes for it to slither away so we could putt."

"It was a riot," Jane Deeter agreed.

Deeter, who was tied with defending champion Jean Hyland after Tuesday's opening round at Hillcrest Country Club, didn't get as big a chuckle out of her second 18-hole effort, however.

"I was horrible, especially on the front nine," Deeter said. "I used 21 putts on the front. That tells my story."

Deeter's balky putter resulted in an 85 as she fell seven strokes off the pace set by Hyland, who recorded a sparkling four-over-par 78 to take a commanding lead.

Hyland, winner of the city crown six of the last seven years, will try to wrap up her 15th overall title during Thursday's final round at the Lincoln Country Club.

"I sank a real long putt for a birdie on No. 14," Hyland reported of her Wednesday round, "and then birdied the next hole.

"But, I didn't play the front side too well," she confessed. "I thought I'd finally got it going on the ninth hole when I put together two long shots. I was right on the fringe of the green, but then took four more shots to get the ball in the hole. That, however, was my only double-bogey of the day."

Nine-time champion Dorothy Schwartzkopf held on to her third place spot in the standings, but after an 86 is now 12 shots back.

The contestants were placed in flights according to their first-day scores. The second-best round Wednesday was posted by Sue Hergert. Her 82 and 176 total would be good enough for fifth-place in the championship chase. Instead, after an opening 94 at Hillcrest, she has a nine-shot lead in the first flight.

Earline Hogg, 100-93—193, heads the second flight after two rounds, while Kay Fox, 106-96—202, is the third flight leader. Edna Gates, 109-95—204, tops the fourth flight, while Jean Marshall, 116-101—217, is the fifth flight pacesetter.

The junior girls tourney — they play nine holes each day — is tied after two days. Suzie Caesar, 49-52, and Kim Davis, 54-47, are deadlocked at 101, with Cindy George, 51-51—102, right behind.

Minnesota fans love singles-hitting Carew

Bloomington, Minn. (UPI) — Babe Ruth and countless others heard the roar of the crowd when they hit home runs. But Rod Carew, Minnesota Twins' batting phenomenon, gets standing ovations just for hitting singles.

Carew, shooting for his sixth american league batting championship, is burning up the place with singles — and doubles, triples and even some home runs.

He has hit a red hot .477 in June, a fantastic .611 in one nine-game stretch through June 27, over .400 so far this season — and leads the league in runs, hits, total bases and triples.

"He's just fabulous," said Calvin Griffith, twins president.

"I've been standing around with my mouth open in total admiration," said manager Gene Mauch.

When the figures were pointed out in an interview, Carew smiled and said:

"That's ridiculous, isn't it."

The fans love him and the twins' see-saw battle with the Chicago White Sox for the west division lead.

After small turnouts early this season, crowds are increasing. Last Sunday nearly 47,000 came out — a met Med stadium record for a regular season game.

The trim 6-foot first baseman is a cinch to be on the American League All-Star Team again — and he's been an all-star every year but one since he reached the majors in 1967.

How does he do it?

"The ball is just finding holes," Carew said. "I use the whole field. I don't try to pull the ball. I want to hit the ball all over the place.

"I don't try to hit the ball out of the park. I might hit a few home runs. I can hit a long way if I really get hold of it but basically I'm a line drive hitter."

"At Seattle, I was trying to hit it out of the park and Gene stopped me and said, 'Rod, that isn't you.' I got back to just hitting the ball."

Carew said he has several things going for him.

"If the third baseman lays back, there's a good chance I can hit to third and beat it out. If he plays me in I can hit over him.

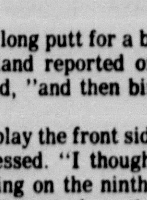
"I enjoy playing the game, I've developed confidence. I know I'm going to hit. I don't worry about slumps because I know I'm going to work my way out of them."

Mauch played with Ted Williams in 1957 when Ted hit .388.

"I thought I'd never see anything like that again," Mauch said, "But I was wrong. Carew gets some hits with his feet that Ted couldn't get because he's so fast.

"Ted would take some hits to left field when the outfield shifted for him. If they gave Carew half the field to shoot at like that, he wouldn't be hitting .400. He'd be hitting .500."

July 4th weekend: Extra reason for safety



It's All Outdoors

By Tom Vint

Safe boating week

Crowds. Congestion. The annual Fourth of July thirst for water recreation is bound to pose safety hazards. That's one of the reasons the Fourth is always included in National Safe Boating Week.

The week, beginning July 3, is geared to call attention to boating safety. The masses of fishermen, sailboaters, canoers, water skiers, pleasure boaters and even swimmers are hazards enough for each other on popular three-day weekends.

"We don't have a lot of problems other than overcrowding," said Nebraska Game and Parks Commission law enforcement officer Andy Nielsen. "We have a lot of new boaters all the time and they don't have any place to learn about boating except on the water. The Coast Guard Auxiliary offers a course and we are just getting a program started, but other than that, it's on-the-water experience."

Bill Janssen, boating safety grant administrator for the commission, indicated Nebraska averages nearly five boating fatalities annually.

"The last fiscal year we had 37 accidents, 26 injuries and one death," said Janssen. "But we had an interim period from July through October when we had 31 more accidents, 12 injuries and two deaths.

"Boating is a common sense type of sport," Janssen said. "Accidents happen because people aren't thinking. If they'd think, most accidents can be avoided."

Collisions and speeding are the two main areas of concern, he pointed out. Boaters run into other boaters, and hit objects in the water such as stumps or bouys. A number of boaters also have trouble thinking out the time to slow boats down.

"Speed is one thing causing some problems," Janssen said. "In a congested area, you just can't operate a boat as fast, but some people seem to think they can and get in trouble doing it."

Discourteous actions

Nielson indicated the commission gets reports nearly every weekend about discourteous action on the water.

"Some fisherman will call in that skiers or motorboaters have come to close to his boat," Nielson said. "Every weekend we hear this. On our small lakes in the Salt Valley you're going to have this. There isn't enough water for the amount of recreation taking place on it. I don't think a lot of that is deliberate, but we do have a few cases."

Nielson reported the biggest complaint is not on the water, but getting into and out of it for boaters. Waiting lines at boat launch areas are growing longer. Campers in boat launch parking lots are compounding the problem, especially when they beach their boats in the immediate area.

"People maybe aren't as considerate as they might be," Nielson said. "There isn't any law prohibiting them from camping there or beaching their boats, but it does create more congestion."

Congestion creates more safety problems.

"We're going to have something like 50,000 boats registered this year," said Janssen. "That's just motorboats and doesn't include the nonpowered boats, canoes, sailboats and rowboats. When you have that many people, you can have problems.

"So many of these accidents, if you think about it, can be prevented. Boating isn't like hunting. When a hunter picks up a gun, the first thing on his mind is safety. Boaters just don't relate canoeing or boating to safety. They don't think these things can kill them.

"Deaths this year included a nonswimmer out in a canoe," Janssen said. "His life jacket was on the floor of the canoe when it turned over. His buddy was able to swim to shore.

"Another case was the drowning at Branched Oak Lake. The victim was a good swimmer, but must have panicked. Again, he didn't have on his life jacket, although a young boy threw one to him. The law doesn't require an adult to wear a life jacket, but it doesn't do them any good just being in the boat."

Safe boating week runs from July 3-9. Think it through and use it as a model for the rest of your boating season. Boating accidents can be prevented with a little common sense.

Expos snap Cubs' 8-game skein

Montreal (AP) — Righthander Jackie Brown pitched a seven-hitter as the Montreal Expos broke the Chicago Cubs' eight-game winning streak with a 5-0 victory Wednesday night.

Brown, 5-6, struck out one and walked none to record his first victory since a 2-0 blanking of the Astros on June 15 in Houston. He had lost two games since.

Andre Dawson was the Expos' offensive star, collecting four singles in four appearances, scoring two runs and driving in another.

Teammate Warren Cromartie had a pair of singles and a double in four at-bats and scored twice while Dave Cash drove in a pair of runs with a single and a sacrifice fly.

The victory was the first for the Expos against Cubs starter Ray Burris since May 20, 1976. Burris, 9-6, lasted 4 2-3 innings, giving up five runs on 10 hits as he lost for the first time in his last seven decisons against Montreal. He was 4-1 against the Expos in 1976 and had two victories over Montreal earlier this season.

Olympic price-gouging their target

Lake Placid, N.Y. (AP) — Local organizers for the 1980 Winter Olympics are seeking state legislation to prevent price-gouging at hotels during the Games, it was revealed Wednesday.

"We want to protect the hotel industry during the Olympic period from any unfair rate gouging, so we can emerge from the Olympics with a good hospitality reputation," said Howard Baker, chairman of the Guest Services sub-committee.

He said the plan would create a state Olympic Housing Authority, to set rates.

Bunny Richards back on the job

By Chuck Sinclair
Staff Sports Writer

Nebraska golf enthusiasts will be pleased to know that less than a month after open-heart surgery, Hillcrest Country Club professional Bunny Richards is back on the job sporting full-time hours.

Although he admits a full schedule is rather taxing at this stage, he wouldn't have it any other way.

"I've really been feeling pretty good," Richards says. "I'm not completely through with surgery, but the most crucial is over. It's great to be back."

Just as Bunny gets back, a prestigious event will be making a return to Hillcrest after a nine-year absence, the Nebraska Amateur Golf Assn. 1977 State Amateur Championships scheduled to run July 27-30.

The NAGA has enlisted the aid of eight-time champion Bob Astleford in helping Richards run the tournament. Astleford, the NAGA tournament director and Richards will handle tournament operations for the 72-hole event.

The state's major golf tournament is open to the first 150 male Nebraska residents with a handicap of eight or less with a pro-am scheduled to precede the tourney on Monday.

Entries must reach the NAGA office, Box 1492, Grand Island, 68801, before July 17, and be among the first 150 to be accepted.

When Jack Nicklaus was in Omaha last week, he discussed the differences in design and set-up of a golf course in reference to the recently completed U.S. Open.

Nicklaus said that it's the way the course is set-up by the U.S.G.A., not the design, that usually has the pros scratching their heads by the time their rounds are finished.

If the state's golfers are scratching their heads after playing in the amateur, it won't be because of such strict controls.

"We work together with the NAGA on how the course might be set-up for tournament play," Richards commented. "But the final decision is ours in all cases. They can make recommendations on pin placements and tees, but they wouldn't think of asking you to let your rough grow.

"There won't be any major changes in the course from now until the tournament," Richards added. "I had a call from the state amateur body to set up a meeting with myself and our superintendent Maury Spence to discuss possible pin placements and things like that."

While there will be no major changes in the course, players who have not played the course since the last state amateur held there in 1968 will notice some definite changes, among them a large fairway trap down the left side of No. 1 fairway.

They will find other changes along with the 10 years growth of all the trees.

"It should be a challenging course for the tournament," Richards said. "It will be interesting."

Here are some other golf notes of local interest:

—The Aurora Open Golf Tournament originally scheduled for June 26th has been rescheduled until August 14th at the Aurora Country Club.

—There will be a public hearing in the Council Chamber of the County-City Building Thursday at 7:30 p.m. for the purpose of discussing and hearing comments regarding fee structures for Lincoln's municipal golf course.

—Entries are open for the men's city golf tournament starting this year on the two public courses followed by a cut to the low 80 players and ties (low 30 in the seniors) then a move to the two country clubs.

—The Lincoln Women's Municipal Golf Assn. 4 club tournament is scheduled for Tuesday at Holmes with a luncheon following.

—The Lincoln Municipal Golfer's Assn. is holding a Scotch twosome tournament at Mahoney Park July 9 open to all members.

—Hidden Valley Golf Course is holding a Fourth of July Couples tournament with a 1 p.m. starting time. Participants may sign up at the course.

Money is Racers' NHL roadblock

Indianapolis (UPI) — The Indianapolis Racers must come up with a financial package of between $3.5 and $5 million within a week if they want to be part of an expanded National Hockey League, it was disclosed Wednesday.

David Givens, general counsel of Indiana National Bank, which recently took over the assets of the financially pressed WHA entry, told a news conference upon his return from WHA meetings in New York the bank was prepared "to assist in making a successful application" for NHL membership.

He said the Racers' partnership must decide by July 6 whether to seek membership in the NHL for the 1977-78 season because the NHL is expected to act on such applications July 14.

The NHL proposed a merger with at least six WHA teams at its meetings in Chicago last week. Indianapolis was not one of the WHA franchises mentioned.

However, Givens said, "to the best of our knowledge, the Racers have a right to apply for NHL membership."

Ude pitches perfect game

Dick Ude hurled a perfect five-inning game and Valentino's backed him with a pair of eight-run innings in a 16-0 win over Arnold's Tavern Wednesday night in the AAA fast pitch-league at Ballard Field.

Ude struck out three in gaining his eighth win in as many starts and Val's scored eight runs in the second and eight more in the fifth.

Dan Schrader's grand slam homer and a solo shot by Rick Kahler keyed the second inning burst and Dennis Kuenning hit a three-run homer in the fifth.

The win lifted Val's (12-2) to within one game of league-leading Misty Lounge (14-2). The two will meet Fridy night at 8:30.

Gary Healy had a triple, double and single and scored three times and Harry Kasischke gained his seventh win without a loss as Dick Flynn Buick dumped Stan's Lounge, 8-3, in Wednesday's nightcap. The win kept Flynn's (11-4) within striking distance of the leaders.

Rod Yoekl homered for Flynn's.

Cup rule okayed

London (AP) — Nations whose players compete in the Davis Cup tennis competition acted Wednesday to prevent teams from withdrawing from the events for political reasons.

Meeting in London they decided that any nation pulling out after the draw has been made will be disqualified the following year.

Basketball

University of North Carolina basketball coach Dean Smith said Wednesday he has asked that his name be withdrawn from consideration for the UCLA coaching job vacated by Gene Bartow earlier this month.

Baseball

Former Cleveland Indians manager Frank Robinson is interested in becoming a coach for the Baltimore Orioles, according to The Baltimore News American.

Cleveland Indians centerfielder Rick Manning has fractured a vertebra and will be lost to the American League baseball team for several months. An orthopedic specialist told the Indians Tuesday that the 22-year-old, who was injured in a head-first slide, must be placed in a back brace for six weeks.

Other sports

Seattle Slew, the undefeated Triple Crown champion, arrived at Hollywood Park Wednesday for Sunday's $300,000 Swaps Stakes.

The Davis Cup tennis nations Wednesday voted to impose automatic one-year suspensions on countries refusing to play matches against opponents on political grounds.

The Nassau County district attorney Wednesday announced the arrest of Richard Sorkin, a former agent for many professional athletes, on charges that he stole more than $600,000 from his clients.

Doctors at an Ohio clinic have scheduled open-heart surgery Thursday on Lou Saban, the University of Miami's new head football coach.

Veteran boat racer Bob Magoon postponed his attempt to break the world record for crossing the Atlantic in a power boat for 24 hours more Wednesday because of rough seas.

Australia, one of two America's Cup contenders from the land down under, arrived in Newport Harbor Tuesday to begin preparations for the foreign preliminaries, scheduled for Aug. 4-9.

Fishing is medicine for former Omaha veterinarian

Minneapolis (UPI) — Dr. Chan Cotton is a muskie fisherman who never misses a day and calls fishing "my medicine."

When he was 40, Cotton was struck by a severe heart attack. A second attack the next year convinced him to sell his veterinary practice in Omaha, Neb., and go fishing.

Now he is 47 and healthy, but he is afraid he may have to go back to work.

Cotton and his wife, Betty, moved to Walker, Minn., where they fish together on Leech Lake, their favorite for muskies.

"Fishing's more relaxing, much less tension than work," Cotton said in a telephone interview. "I was taking nine nitro pills a day for my heart when I sold my practice.

"I haven't taken one the past year. It goes to show how much heart attacks are connected with work. Fishing is my medicine."

How does he survive without working in three years?

"It's getting tough," Cotton said. "We're debating whether I should go back to the practice. There is a need for vets up here. It would be tough arranging schedules to fish, but I wouldn't let the job interfere with my fishing."

Cotton keeps only trophy muskies, usually one a season. One year he boated 108 muskies and returned 107.

His largest muskie was caught last Sept. 22. It was 56½ inches long. His favorite method is to use a large spinner and drift, while casting with a fast retrieve reel.

July is the best time to go for muskies on Leech Lake and Cotton said he usually fishes Portage Bay on the northeast side.

"There is more muskies in that area than any place in the world — even the famous Chippewa Flowage of Wisconsin. Nobody knows why. It constantly produces fish," he said.

For those unfamiliar with muskie fishing, it takes an expert fishermen from 60 to 100 hours to boat a legal sized muskie. By law, those under 30 inches must be released in Minnesota.

He has boated 12 muskies so far this year and returned all of them. The largest was 48½ inches, and weighed 40 pounds, 3 ounces.

'Satch' Sanders goes to Celtics

Boston (UPI) — Tom, (Satch) Sanders, 38, a 13-year veteran of the Boston Celtics and more recently head basketball mentor at Harvard University, was named Wednesday as the new Celtics' assistant coach.

The announcement was made by Celtics' President and General Manager Red Auerbach, who refused to divulge details of his new employe's contract, but Sanders later acknowledged the pact was for more than two years.

Sanders replaces former Celtics' Assistant Coach and Head Scout John Killilea who last week resigned to take a similar post with the Milwaukee Bucks, now coached by former Celtic forward Don Nelson.

During the past four years, Sanders compiled a 40-60 record as head basketball coach for Harvard.

FCC clears NCAA TV clout

Washington (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission ruled Wednesday it cannot prevent the National Collegiate Athletic Association from keeping off television the games of schools which violate NCAA rules.

The 6-1 vote, with Commissioner Benjamin L. Hooks dissenting, upheld an FCC Broadcast Bureau ruling Jan. 31 denying an appeal by Dr. John Irvan Moritzky Choate of Sand Springs, Okla.

Choate, on Aug. 5, 1975, asked the commission to investigate possible television censorship of athletic contests.

He contended the NCAA had adopted a policy of using access to television to ensure compliance with its rules.

Powerlifting event slated

The 1977 AAU Junior National Powerlifting Championships will be competed in Lincoln Saturday and Sunday.

Over 130 lifters from 32 states are entered. The designation "junior" has nothing to do with the ages of the competitors, meet chairman Roger Benjamin explains.

"Some of the best in the world will be on hand," Benjamin predicts. "A lifter is in the so-called junior class as long as he hasn't won a national title at the weight in which he will compete."

Lincoln's Mike Arthur, the top featherweight in the world last year, is eligible since he will be entered at 132 pounds.

Arthur set a deadlift world record of 540 pounds last year and his combined three-lift total of 1,210 pounds was the best in the world in 1976.

A physique competition — the winner will be crowned "Mr. Junior USA" — will also be held. Twenty-one entries from 15 states will be on hand. The current Mr. Nebraska, Chad Leonardi of Lincoln, defeated two top national performers last weekend in the Mr. Great Plains contest in St. Joseph, Mo.

Another top local entry in the lifting competition is super heavyweight Howard Nissen. A state trooper, the 294-pound Nissen is a member of the governor's security force as a bodyguard for Gov. Exon.

The schedule of events, all to be conducted in the east and west ballrooms of the Radisson Cornhusker Hotel:

Saturday

9 a.m. — 114, 123 and 132-pound classes.
10 a.m. — Pre-judging of physique competition.
1 p.m. — 148 and 165-pound classes.
8 p.m. — Finals of physique competition.

Sunday

9:30 a.m. — 181 and 198-pound classes.
2 p.m. — 220, 242 and super heavyweight classes.

Edna Stengel gravely ill

Glendale, Calif. (AP) — Mrs. Edna Stengel, widow of baseball great Casey Stengel, remained gravely ill but in stable condition Wednesday, according to a Glenoaks Convelescent Hospital spokeswoman.

Mrs. Stengel, 82, suffered a stroke last week. She has been in the hospital for five years because of poor health.

The former Edna Lawson was married to Stengel 52 years. Stengel, Hall of Fame manager for the New York Yankees, died of cancer in 1975 at the age of 85.

Stengel led the Yankees to 10 American League pennants and seven World Series championships.

Martin named NP track coach

North Platte — Doug Martin, head track coach at Gothenburg for the past six years, has been named to a similar position at North Platte High School.

Martin, the current president of the Nebraska Coaches Association, replaces Dave Aaberg, who resigned.

Colleges meet with IRS today

Washington (AP) — A group of colleges will try to persuade the Internal Revenue Service Thursday that income derived from the televising and broadcasting of athletic contests should be tax-exempt.

Lawyers for the Cotton Bowl Association, a subsidiary of the Southwest Conference, as well as representatives for Southern Methodist University, Texas Christian University and Kansas will discuss the issue with IRS officials at the headquarters here.

The outcome of the conference will have a major effect on all colleges, one that could cost schools across the country $150 million in back taxes.

In a recent memorandum to members, J. Neils Thompson, president of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, described the potential IRS action as "a serious threat to the financial health of intercollegiate athletic programs."

In a routine audit of the Cotton Bowl in 1973, an IRS agent in Dallas concluded that television receipts were unrelated business income and thus outside the customary tax-exemt status for schools and colleges. The Dallas office, however, asked IRS headquarters in Washington for "technical advice."

Under such circumstances, the taxpayer can ask for a conference to discuss the issue. After one such conference, there was an indication that IRS was going to issue an adverse finding, meaning that the Cotton Bowl would have to come up with taxes for the past three years, plus seven per cent interest, or about $2.5 million.

The Cotton Bowl then asked for another hearing — the one Thursday — so that additional arguments could be made.

Big Ten, Pac-8 object to bowl

From news wires

The Olympia Challenge Bowl, announced Tuesday as an all-star clash between seniors from the Big Ten and Pacific 8 conferences, has drawn objections from both conferences.

Commissioner Wayne Duke said Wednesday the Big Ten objects to its senior football players participating in the game next January in Seattle and Pac-8 Executive Director Wiles Hallock said that conference has no involvement with and has not endorsed the game.

Duke said, however, that neither conference could prevent the seniors from playing.

"They play in the Senior Bowl and that's the same thing," Duke said.

"Sponsors of the game have been in touch with us but the Pac-8 is not officially connected with the game in any form," Hallock said. "It is my personal belief that our members will not encourage their players to participate."

U.S. athletes star in World Games

Helsinki (UPI) — Americans dominated the start of the two-day 11th World Games Track and Field meet at Helsinki Olympic Stadium Wednesday as cold weather and a threat of rain reduced attendance to only 13,549 fans.

Tom Andrews, Bakersfield, Calif. won the 400-meter hurdles in 49.6 in a hard fight with Wes Williams, San Diego, who finished in 49.7. Williams was ahead until a few meters from the finish line, but had to give into Andrew's strong finish. Last year's Olympic fourth, Quentin Wheeler finished third.

Rosalyn Bryant of Chicago took a convincing win in the women's 400 meters. Bryant finished on 52.7, beating Beth Nail, Australia, 53.3 and Finland's Pirjo Haeggman, who finished on 53.6.

Henry March, of Brigham Young University, proved the strongest in the men's 3,000-meter steeplechase. After a rocket finish over the last 50 meters he cut the wire at 8:27.9, just ahead of Kenya's James Munyala. Finland's Tapio Kantanen was left behind at the 2,400 meter mark, after a move to gain a lead on the previous lap, and finished third.

In the men's 800 meters, Kenyan Mike Boit was in a class of his own. He took command of the race on the first lap and won at 1:44.6.

Boit said after the race he would like to race against Cuban Alberto Juantorena, who won the Olympic 800 meters. Juantorena is running only one event at Helsinki, Thursday's 400 meters.

"I'd like a real race, where I don't have to do all the work myself," Boit said.

A breakdown of the electric time-keeping system marred the men's 100 meters. Cuban ace Silvio Leonard sped to a fine 10.0 victory in the fastest race Helsinki spectators ever have seen. Guy Abrahams, Panama, Charlie Wells, U.S.A., and Haseley Crawford, Trinidad, all clocked 10.1.

Cuban David Giralt created a small sensation in the men's long jump by beating Olympic Champion Arnie Robinson of San Diego. After a tie at 25-5-7/8 after three jumps, Giralt stretched to a winning 26-1-3/8 in his final try.

Two holes-in-one recorded

The Hillcrest Country Club yielded two holes-in-one last Saturday as Annie Settell and Larry Rowan each recorded an ace.

With her husband, Bob Settell, looking on, Mrs. Settell stroked a three-wood shot into the cup on the 114-yard par three No. 12 hole.

Rowan picked up his ace on the No. 8 par three 157-yard hole. Mel Mooberry, Joe Grovier, Lov Ottemann, Bob Caesav and Bud Brown witnessed Rowan's four-iron shot.

EPA estimates. Your actual mileage will vary depending on your car's condition, optional equipment, and how and where you drive.

2. Independent owners did the comparing.

63% of those who tested a Ford LTD and a Chevy Impala chose the LTD.

In a recent independent test 50 Ford and 50 Chevy owners selected at random in the Los Angeles area rated both Ford LTD and Impala for:
- Overall styling
- Interior and exterior features
- Roominess
- Trunk space
- Parking
- Driving under city, freeway and residential conditions

There were 55 separate tests in total. At the conclusion of these tests, all were asked if they had to choose, which of these cars they would be more likely to buy. The answer? 63% or nearly two out of three chose a Ford LTD.

So if you're in the habit of buying an Impala without comparing, kick the habit and compare. Because this year there are surprising differences between Ford LTD and Impala.

Blue chips slip further

Dow Ind. -2.29

New York (AP) — Prices of blue chip stocks slipped further in light trading Wednesday continuing a pessimistic trend of early this week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 2.29 to 913.33 bringing the net loss for this week to more than 16 points.

But overall, losing issues outnumbered gainers by only a small fraction. Among 1,863 issues traded on the New York Stock Exchange, 716 lost and 676 advanced.

Trading was broadly lower early in the session as the Dow index dropped about 5 points and more than twice as many issues posted losses as gains before regaining ground in the afternoon.

At the market's opening, the Commerce Department announced a slight decline in its May economic indicator index ending consecutive increases in the index for the prior three months.

Although the news was somewhat expected, analysts noted it added to pessimism about the economic outlook.

Brokers also attributed part of the decline to a carryover of fairly strong selling that started late Tuesday after budget director Bert Lance increased his budget deficit estimate for the next fiscal year.

An Agriculture Department report reflecting a slowdown in farm price increases was noted as a positive factor influencing the market comeback in the afternoon by easing inflation worries.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrial stocks closed off .04 at 110.30. The S&P 500-stock composite index dipped .03 to 100.11.

Such strong components of the Dow industrial average as steel and chemical issues showed particular weakness recently following reports of a decline in July steel orders and published analyst reports pessimistic about earnings prospects of a number of chemical concerns.

The NYSE's composite index closed off .04 at 54.90. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .11 at 119.58.

Barrow, gilt prices drop at Omaha

Omaha (AP) — Prices on barrows and gilts dropped on the Omaha livestock market Wednesday with 4,000 hogs on sale.

Barrows and gilts 200-240 pounds were 50-75 lower, with heavier animals to 330 pounds down 50-1.00. Trade was moderately active.

Top grade 195-240 pounds barrows and gilts sold for 46.50-47.00, with a liberal volume at 47.00.

Sows were 50-75 lower and 300-600 pounders returned 38.50-39.25, a consignment near 450 pounds at 39.50.

Sellers offered 5,800 cattle. Steers and heifers were slow, mostly 25-50 lower with many late sales at the full decline.

Cows were slow, mostly 50 lower.

A load of choice with and end of prime 1,075 pounds steers brought 42.00, two loads of choice 1,175-1,300 pounders at 41.75-42.00, a load of choice and prime 1,300 pounds 41.50 and a load of choice with an end of prime 1,150 pounds 41.75.

There were 900 sheep on sale. Spring slaughter lambs were steady and choice and prime 90-115 pounders returned 51.00-52.25.

Brazil, Iran agree to pact

Brazikia, Brazil (AP) — Brzil and Iran signed a five-year, $6.5 billion trade agreement under which Brazil will buy one-quarter of its oil imports from Iran by 1979.

In exchange, Iran will spend 30% of the money from the oil purchases for Brazilian products or investments here. Sources say Brazil wants Iran to buy soybeans, corn, meat, rice, sugar, vegetable oil and railroad equipment.

Soybeans fall sharply

Chicago (AP) — Soybean futures fell sharply on the Chicago Board of Trade Wednesday after four days of advancing prices that had produced a gain of more than 70 cents a bushel.

Soybeans were down 17 cents, meal lost $3.50 a ton and oil was down some 75 points, or ¾ cent a pound. Wheat futures fell back 5¼ cents, corn 3¼ and oats 2½. Iced broilers closed steady to about ¼ cent a pound higher after a lightly traded session.

Turkish vodka is made from beets

New York (UPI) — Most vodka is made from potatoes or grain. But in Turkey it is made from white beets, and the first brand of that type to reach the United States is currently going into stores nationwide.

It's a clear beverage, 80 proof, but there the resemblance to potato and grain spirits ends. The distinctive aroma of the other types is missing and, to some persons, the mild flavor seems more akin to white brandies than traditional vodkas.

(Izmira, imported and bottled by Izmira Imports Co., New York, N.Y., is distilled under government supervision in Turkey.)

Iowa publisher buys newspaper

Moulton, Iowa (UPI) — The Dinsmore Publishing, Co., Fremont, has purchased the Moulton Weekly Tribune, Keith Dinsmore said.

Dinsmore and his wife Sandy own 13 Iowa newspapers, and on in Missouri. He said the Tribune will be converted from letterpress to offset printing.

Katherine Bassett, whose grandfather founded the Tribune in 1884, will stay on as office manager and will continue operations of Bassett Photo and the Moulton Printing Co., Dinsmore said.

Japan's trade surplus rises

Tokyo (AP) — Japan's trade surplus with the industrialized nations rose sharply to $8.670 billion is fiscal 1976 from $2.377 billion is fiscal 1975, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry said.

The country's over-all trade surplus is fiscal 1976, which ended in March, hit a record $9.887 billion, compared with $5.029 billion is fiscal 1975.

Exports to developing nations, meanwhile, accounted for 46.5% of over-all exports.

800 jobs expected with Ford expansion

Sterling Heights, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co. has disclosed plans for a $254 million expansion of two component plants in this northern Detroit suburb to produce a new lightweight automobile rear axle.

The expansion would create 800 new jobs, Ford said.

FOOTNOTES

Composite tables include trades from eight markets identified by last price indicators for markets other than NYSE as: a-Amex; b-Boston; c-Cincinnati; g-Nasd; k-instinet block trading system used by institutions; p-Pacific; u-Mid west; x-Philadelphia.

DIVIDENDS: Annual rate unless otherwise identified: (a) plus extra; (b) paid so far in 1977, no regular rate; (c) payment on accumulated dividends; (d) paid in 1976; (e) cash plus stock paid in 1976; (f) cash plus stock paid in 1977; (g) annual rate plus stock dividend; (h) paid in 1977—latest dividend omitted; (i) per cent in stock paid in 1976; (j) per cent in stock paid in 1977—latest dividend omitted; (k) per cent in stock paid in 1977; (q) in bankruptcy-receivership or reorganization; (s) capital distribution; (wi) when issued; (wt) warrants; (x) ex-dividend.

SALES: in hundreds (00) omitted except for those designated (z) which are traded in 10 share lots and carried in full.

P-E ratio: The price of a stock as a multiple of pershare earnings—derived by dividing the latest 12-month earnings figure into last sale price.

THE COMMONWEALTH NOW PAYS EVEN HIGHER INTEREST RATES

Astrological Forecast

By Sidney Omarr

Thursday, June 30, 1977

Popularity Poll: "It is not easy to pick a favorite sign because I think my own sign, Capricorn, is the best . . . but after weighing all pros and cons I choose Taurus. Believe me, this is not easy because Taurus people irritate me to no end! But I do have a very high respect for Taurus. Taurus people are kind to their enemies. You know, there are times when I wish my Taurus friends didn't like me so much." —Jane Ranon, Duluth, Minn. Comment: I know what you mean, Jane. With friends like you have, who needs enemies.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your views are sought by one "high up" — define your terms and set your fee. Be realistic. Don't sell yourself short. Know that community standards prevail — you can't crusade in half-hearted manner. Patience, keen observation, persistence win for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Long-range view is necessary. What seemed a fantasy comes into focus. Hints available if you study Aries message. Philosophical matters dominate. Past and present seem to blend. You have chance to apply lessons learned through experience. Capricorn is in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish tasks which had been put aside — get credit due you. Aries, Libra figure prominently. Accent on money of partner, mate. One who rents to you or makes loan expresses curiosity about your activites.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on legal ties, public relations, the finish of a deal, a renewed contract under "Different conditions." Be direct, independent without being arrogant. Member of opposite sex has a real interest in you. That soon will be proven.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Follow through — rise above petty details. Teach and learn. Ingratiate yourself with one who has mastered a phase of operations essential to ultimate success of your "mission." One who understands principles of survival plays a very significant role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lunar position emphasizes chance, speculative ventures, activity connected with children, intensified relationship. Creative juices are activated. Fun, activity, your own style, personal magnetism — these are all part of an exciting scenario.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Check fine print — read between the lines. Deal with one who, in recent past, has been erratic. Accent on steadiness, foolproof safety measures, airtight property arrangements, mature decisions regarding your own — and family — security. You'll understand!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Activity, inquiries, relatives with complaints questions, requests are in picture. Short trips, our-of-way places to dine are also part of scenario. Member of opposite sex makes life worth living — your communications antenna is up, vibrant, operating full-steam.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Full Moon position accents what you possess, what is of value, the love and security, the beauty in your life. Yes, an "accounting" takes place. You may or may not be found wanting — but you have a glorious opportunity to sum up, to be truthful with — you. Do so!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Full Moon cycle favors you — you can define, slice thin, be rid of extraneous material, the fat, the superfluous. Take initiative. Be open to romance, creativity, love. Refuse to take back seat to hackneyed characters who can only repeat cliches. You'll comprehend!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You gain enlightenment — and, in this case, knowledge could be frightening. Know it and keep events in proper perspective. You're powerful? Did you realize it? Capricorn, Cancer figure in picture — and so does the number "8." Yes, you will succeed, be vindicated and secure.

PISCES (Feb. 18-March 20): Emphasis on what you say and the effect of your words. Social mores, social justice, social activity all are in picture. Your sensitivity, extrasensory perception figure prominently. Aries, Libra persons play key roles.

IF JUNE 30th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are versatile, somewhat of a comedian — you are conscious of physical fitness, have a weight problem, deal extensively with Gemini, Sagittarius persons. February and November are indicated as outstanding months for you in 1977. In July, you make vital discovery, enhance your security, get rid of what has been a burden and you contact persons who can aid in bringing about a feeling of worth, confidence.

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Opponents of more aid short by 500 volunteers

The likelihood of a referendum to block the $20 million increase in state aid to education is growing slimmer with each passing summer day.

Only half the number of volunteers needed to successfully circulate petitions for the 54,000 to 60,000 signatures have stepped forward, said S. H. Brauer Jr., executive secretary of the Nebraska School Improvement Association (NSIA).

Brauer's survey last week showed much too strong support to drop the effort but not enough support to ensure its success "without a tremendous sacrifice on the part of the volunteers," he said.

It would take at least 1,000 volunteers to get the signatures needed to suspend the 1977 law and put the issue on the 1978 ballot. So far Brauer said he has received responses from 400 to 500 willing workers.

"I'm not going to go back a second and third time, like we did in 1975, and ask volunteers to gather more signatures," he said.

Another problem is that the team leaders from the successful 1974 referendum campaign have not volunteered. Even former state Sen. Ramey Whitney of Chappell, a 1974 leader, is reluctant to assume the task again this year.

Whitney said he is busy with the wheat harvest and cannot take time out to campaign against the law setting up consecutive increases in state aid from $55 million to $115 million in three years.

"Someone else will have to lead it," Whitney said.

But Brauer is still counting on Whitney's taking a major role. He needs Whitney's contacts with other groups to forge a successful coalition, he said.

The NSIA's partner in the 1974 effort, the AFL-CIO, balking this year, Brauer said. Without union organizations circulating petitions, finding qualified volunteers to gain signatures in urban areas becomes more difficult, he said.

Brauer is currently considering placing an advertisement explaining the referendum drive in the state's major dailies to seek support from urban areas.

He is also hoping to find other organizations willing to help in the drive.

"If anyone takes this for granted and thinks someone else is going to do the foot work, they're going to be fooled," he said.

Any decision to go ahead with the drive must be made by the middle of July in order to give volunteers time to circulate petitions before the Sept. 2 deadline, Brauer said.

The petition has been drawn and sent to the printer, Brauer said. If a go-ahead decision is made, it will be ready.

Cancer funds extended

Omaha (AP) — The Eppley Cancer Institute, part of the University of Nebraska Medical Center, will receive a three-month extension of its 1976-77 contract with the National Cancer Institute, an Eppley official said Tuesday.

The $3.1 million contract, the institute's major source of funds, was to end June 30.

The General Accounting Office is expected to report in August on its investigation of the institute's contracts with the National Cancer Institute and use of federal funds.

Dr. Philip Issenberg, associate director of the Eppley Institute, said its officials will be negotiating a new contract with the National Cancer Institute during the next three months.

The Eppley Institute expects to receive about the same funding during the three-month extension as it received during the last year, he said.

Fireworks areas designated

Nine state recreation areas will have Independence Day fireworks sites, according to the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission.

The areas, which may be used from 8 a.m. until midnight on July 4 only, are: Branched Oak, Memphis, Fremont, Louisville, Bridgeport, Two Rivers, Kearney County, Wagon Train and Pawnee State. Use of fireworks elsewhere on state areas or at other times is prohibited.

Guest brings 300 pounds of luggage

Omaha (AP) — Roger Clemens' work is pianos. He reconditions, restores, rebuilds or whatever has to be done, except tuning.

Clemens, 46 travels all over North America plying his craft.

For a week, Clemens has been in Omaha restoring part of the Joslyn Art Museum's Steinway Concert Grand in the Witherspoon Hall.

Clemens, a meticulous worker, brought thousands of tools with him. His baggage weighed 300 pounds.

His services were required because the action of the 1940 piano needed repair. "A piano with an inoperative action is like a race car with some of the plugs missing," Clemens said.

Clemens does not have a name for his profession. "I guess you could call me a piano technician. I suppose that's the closest."

On the road nearly all the time, Clemens said that last year he spent nine days at his home at Jerome, Ariz. "The rest of the time I was either traveling or working."

A native New Yorker, Clemens got involved with music early. At the age of 15 he performed in his first nightclub playing the trumpet. "I never dreamed I'd be anything but a musician," he said. He also studied classical piano.

He started college and then left to go into the service. After three years in the Air Force, Clemens had to decide between continuing his military specialty — physical therapy — or returning to music.

"I'm sure if I hadn't decided in favor of music," he said, "I would be practicing medicine today."

Clemens then apprenticed himself in Los Angeles, working under some of the old masters in the profession.

Then he began his cross-country junkets restoring pianos which brought him to concert halls, universities, museums and homes of the work's great piano players.

Clemens ranks the Joslyn piano near the top. "I would say it is one of the 10 best I've ever worked on. I wouldn't mind buying this one, even though I already have one. But then maybe I need two."

Two teenagers suffocate in bin

Stuart (AP) — Two teenagers were suffocated in a grain bin accident Tuesday, Holt County Sheriff Charles Fox said.

Fox identified the two as 18-year-old Keith Brown of Stuart and 14-year-old John Quigley of Norfolk.

Fox said the youths were unloading a grain bin on the west edge of town when the accident occurred.

Relatives reported them missing about 2:30 p.m. Authorities who disassembled the grain bin found their bodies, he said.

Open hearing granted in Texan's murder trial

North Platte (AP) — A Texas man accused of killing a fellow power plant worker asked for and was granted Wednesday an open hearing on his first degree murder charge.

Lincoln County Judge Earl Morgan rejected a prosecution motion that the preliminary hearing be closed, after public defender Keith Bystrom said defendant William Glenn Cochran wanted it open.

Cochran is accused of shooting Louie Bridgeman of Louisiana Friday. Cochran's two younger brothers are being held as material witnesses.

The four men, all workers at the Gerald Gentleman power plant, lived together in a tent near the Sutherland reservoir.

Before ruling that the hearing would be open, Morgan met with members of local news media, who agreed to abide by restrictions in the Nebraska Bar-Press guidelines when reporting on the hearing.

Omaha rate for sewers is going up

Omaha (UPI) — The cost of sewer service in Omaha may be going up more than originally anticipated.

City finance director George Richardson said the average residential rate could be at least $86.40. The city earlier had indicated the new fee might be $72.

Omahans currently pay an average of $57.60, according to revised figures compiled by the Finance Department.

The $72 average rate was based on a 50% increase of what city officials thought was the current average fee — $48.

Richardson commented after City Councilman Jerry Hassett urged the council to delete $4.7 million from the city's application for public works act money. The funds would be used to begin the Papillion Creek Plant.

The mayor's office and the Public Works Department contend the project is necessary, but Hassett disagreed.

He suggested using the money instead to build a giraffe house at the Henry Doorly Zoo, refurbish the vacant interim City Hall, build a maintenance garage for the Parks and Recreation Department and construct a library in Millard.

Hassett also suggested spending part of the money for an elevated walkway connecting the Hilton Hotel with a planned addition to the city auditorium and for a lighted baseball field.

Omaha mall pool water polluted

Omaha (UPI) The pool at the Central Park Mall may look inviting on a hot day, but waders risk infection and skin disease, the chief of environmental health for the Omaha-Douglas County Health Department said.

Don Olson said Wednesday tests show the water is "grossly contaiminated."

Open sores could become infected and a skin rash known as "swimmer's itch" could result from wading in the pool, he said.

A number of people attending a festival at the mall last weekend cooled off in the pool, even though a sign is posted prohibiting wading.

Prostitute is hit on head by man

Omaha (UPI) — A woman who admitted to police she was a prostitute was reported in good condition Wednesday recovering from a fractured skull after a customer beat her on the head with a wrench.

Lorelie D. Owens, 24, Council Bluffs, told police she met the man in downtown Omaha at about 11 p.m. Tuesday. Miss Owens got into the man's car and they drove to a secluded area nearby, she said.

Miss Owens also suffered cuts and bruises on the head when the man beat her on the head with a long-handled wrench.

Police reports said the man told Miss Owens he had been robbed by a prostitute a few days earlier and wanted to get even.

Meat center named in honor of Hruska

Omaha (AP) — The Senate Agriculture Committee Tuesday approved a bill to rename the National Meat Animal Research Center at Clay Center in honor of former Nebraska Sen. Roman Hruska.

The bill, sponsored by Nebraska Sen. Carl Curtis would rename the center the Roman L. Hruska Meat Animal Research Center. As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee Hruska was instrumental in funding the construction of the center.

Chambers' complaint leads to investigation

Omaha (UPI) — A complaint by State Sen. Ernest Chambers that Omaha police officers mistreated a black woman and her son following a rock-throwing incident has prompted a federal investigation.

U.S. Attorney Daniel Wherry said the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division investigated the incident, but no decision had been made whether to pursue the complaint.

Chambers said police officers arrested Mrs. Lillian E. Sheppard, a black woman, after she demanded that a white woman release her son.

The white woman had taken Ronald Sheppard, 9, to her apartment while she called police after she was told that boys were throwing rocks at her car.

Officers said when they arrived at the apartment, Mrs. Sheppard was upset and abusive. They handcuffed her and took both Mrs. Sheppard and her son to police headquarters.

She was charged with disorderly conduct, but the charge was later dropped.

Several days later, the white woman involved was arrested for allegedly threatening a white child with scissors, and was hospitalized for mental observation.

Chambers contended the police officers erred in arresting Mrs. Sheppard and her son rather than the woman who detained the boy.

Chambers said the failure of police to charge the white woman, even when she threatened the white child, showed the difference between the way police handle cases involving whites and blacks.

The city attorney's office said it has decided against taking any action agaihst the officers.

"Although the officers' conduct might have been improvident, it does not appear under the law to constitute a violation of Mrs. Sheppard's federally protected rights," said Deputy City Attorney James Fellows.

Berrigan suspects Rice may have been 'framed'

Omaha (AP) — The Rev. Daniel Berrigan, an anti-war activist during the late 1960s, said Wednesday he "has a growing suspicion" that David L. Rice, convicted slayer of an Omaha police officer, was "framed."

Father Berrigan, in Omaha to speak at Creighton University, said he has asked twice to visit Rice at the Nebraska Penal Complex but twice has been rejected. The latest rejection was during this visit to Nebraska.

Father Berrigan said he will meet with attorneys and Rice's mother to see if there is a way to force prison officials to permit a meeting. He said the Rev. William Cunningham, a Jesuit priest and lawyer from Santa Clara University, is coming to Omaha to discuss the Rice case.

On other subjects, Father Berrigan criticized President Carter for "reneging on his campaign promises" to reduce military spending. He said Carter has delayed a decision on whether to fund construction of the B1 bomber as a "prepared canard" to mislead the public.

And he hit what he called "the atrocious SAC base" in Bellevue for its part in what he called "nuclear madness."

Hebron man, 89, accused of shooting son in argument

Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Hebron — An 89-year-old man has been jailed here for allegedly shooting his son, 55, during an argument over placing the father in a nursing home.

Pash Hendershot has been charged with "shooting with intent to wound or maim." The son, Walter L. Hendershot, is reported in good condition at Thayer County Memorial Hospital.

Thayer County sheriff, Jim Johnson, said the elder Hendershot is believed to have shot the son in the chest with a .32 caliber pistol. The incident allegedly occurred Monday noon.

Johnson was called after the wounded man went to the hospital for treatment. The sheriff said the suspect offered no resistance when he then went to his home.

In an initial appearance before Associate County Judge Robert L. Stutz, bond was set at $50,000. Attorney Lyle Koenig was appointed to represent the defendant, pending a preliminary hearing, which has not yet been scheduled.

According to Johnson, the defendant's wife is already a resident of the Blue Valley Nursing Home which he was scheduled to enter.

Peru head to announce decision

Peru — Peru State College President Dr. Douglas Pearson will announce his decision about a faculty vote of confidence Thursday afternoon.

Pearson called for the vote of confidence during a Monday meeting of about 40 Peru professional staff members. He said tat if the vote went against him he would offer his resignation to the state college Board of Trustees.

The vote totals have not been released and Pearson has not been available for comment.

Chiropractor's case is in legal limbo

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

Dr. William Seng's future in the criminal justice system hinges on the decision of the Lancaster County District Court.

The case of the 35-year-old Lincoln chiropractor, charged with manslaughter last November in the death of a 14-year-old patient, has been in legal limbo amid pleas and briefs filed with District Court Judge William Hastings.

Seng was arraigned Nov. 8 in connection with the death of Debra Sue Schoenrock. Miss Schoenrock, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Schoenrock, died Sept. 21 of pneumonia. Following a seven-week investigation by the county attorney's office, Seng was accused of "negligence" because the girl needed medical, not chiropractic, treatment, according to County Attorney Ron Lahners.

Seng had been expected to enter the pre-trial diversion program, but was arraigned in District Court in February after officials of the program told Lahners that the chiropractor "was not going to appear for (the completion of) his screening and there was nothing else to be done," Lahners said.

Pre-trial diversion offers three months to a year of counseling for persons charged with nonviolent felonies. Charges are dropped after successful completion of the program.

Seng's attorney, John Stevens Berry, contended during the county and district court hearings that there was insufficient evidence to force his client to stand trial. Those contentions, known as a plea in abatement, are still pending before Judge Hastings.

In March, the girl's parents filed a civil suit in district court seeking recovery of $4,500 and other unspecified damages. That suit is also pending.

Monday, more than seven months after the matter came to public attention, no decisions had been made, but Berry said he isn't surprised.

"We (Berry and the county attorney's office) have filed all of our briefs on time. The judge still needs to hear our oral arguments before making his decision," Berry said.

But, "time, in matters like this, makes a good deal of sense," he added. Nebraska is a speedy state, compared to some, he said. He mentioned states where such cases take "five to seven years" before they come to trial.

Berry added, if there is a trial, "it probably won't be until this fall," almost a year after the original charges were filed.

Vitek, Bereuter debate state pen construction

Associated Press

Correctional Services Director Joseph Vitek took his arguments for a construction plan at the State Penitentiary before the Legislature's Appropriations Committee Wednesday, and renewed a long-standing debate with Sen. Doug Bereuter.

Vitek's lengthy explanation of the planning and decisions on the campus design for the new maximum security housing units left Bereuter no more impressed than during the 1977 session, when the committee rejected the building concept.

"In general, I'm uneasy about the plans," Bereuter said. "There doesn't seem to be any emphasis on inmate work when reports show inmates working as little as 20 minutes a day."

The Utica lawmaker, vice chairman of the panel, was also critical because the design would lead to relatively higher operating costs with the prisoner to guard ratio increased by 50 per cent.

Vitek responded that Bereuter was seemingly trying to find both a modern facility and the economies of the large cell block where prisoners are "herded like animals."

Attempts to find a middle ground between small unit campus atmosphere and large cell blocks were tried in the 1960s and failed, Vitek said.

The state health and safety code combined with recent federal court rulings virtually mandated the campus plan, Vitek said.

"If I were an inmate, I'm not sure I would feel safe," in the proposed housing, Bereuter said.

Safety for the public, inmates and staff are major considerations, Vitek said.

Many questions were raised at the committee meeting for Vitek to answer when he comes before the panel next month.

The committee also reviewed the plans for construction, and destruction, at the Beatrice State Home. Jack Cleavenger, director of the Department of Public Institutions, said seven obsolete buildings at Beatrice should be razed.

Those building cannot be renovated economically to meet federal requirements or national standards, Cleavenger said.

Planning is difficult, he said, because of the unsettled nature of the court case against the state by the federal government. Although the case was settled, the U.S. Justice Department has claimed the state has failed to live up to its commitments.

Ex-Detective fined

Omaha (UPI) — A former Omaha police detective has been fined $25 for possession of marijuana.

Brian Johnson, 32, was arrested June 14 after narcotics detectives, acting on a tip, found about nine ounces of marijuana at his home. Johnson had pleaded innocent, contending the marijuana belonged to a friend.

Normal July forecast

The 30-day Nebraska weather outlook for July calls for temperatures to be near normal. Precipitation is expected to be below normal in the west to near or slightly above normal in the east.

Normal high temperatures are in the mid-80s to the mid-90s, while normal lows range mostly in the 60s. Normal precipitation is around 1 inch in the west to about 3 inches in the east.

Larsen resigns post

Hastings (AP) — Adams County criminal investigator Harold Larsen submitted his resignation from the sheriff's department Tuesday, effective July 31.

In a letter of resignation to Sheriff Robert Anderson, Larsen cited "implied and expressed internal department pressures and animosities." Larsen was referring to the controversy surrounding the ambulance service and its removal from the sheriff's department last month.

Larsen had supported the separation.

Sciences grant awarded

Omaha (AP) — The University of Nebraska at Omaha mathematics and computer sciences department has received a $20,800 grant from the National Science Foundation. It will finance a feasibility study of personalized instruction systems for teaching algebra and trigonometry, the school said.

Massive power line working

Columbus (AP) — The Nebraska Public Power District said Tuesday the state's largest electric transmission line west of Grand Island has been put into operation. The 163-mile, 345,000 volt line connects the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation substation at Grand Island with the substation near the Gerald Gentleman Power Station at Sutherland.

Free parking to end

Omaha (AP) — Mayor Al Veys decreed Wednesday that free parking at hooded meters in the downtown Omaha, South Omaha and Benson business districts will end next Tuesday.

Since March, the city has experimented with free parking at the request of businessmen. The idea was to allow free parking for two hours to insure a regular turnover.

Veys said the hoods would be removed at least temporarily to see if it makes a difference to business.

Recycling aids needy

Omaha (AP) — Recycling of newspapers by Omahans resulted Wednesday in $632 being available for the Omaha Church Pantry Program, to buy food for needy persons.

The Rev. David Holland, pantry director, said the money will feed 25 to 30 families for three days.

Contracts awarded

Wayne (AP) — The Wayne City Council has awarded a $189,923 contract for downtown improvements to the Gill Construction Co. of Jackson.

The downtown improvements include new sidewalks on 12 city blocks and some beautification work.

Lemurs display increases

Omaha (AP) — Four ringtailed lemurs arrived in Omaha Tuesday to join the one male of the species already residing at the Henry Doorly Zoo.

Dr. Lyndsay Phillips, zoo veterinarian, said the lemurs are a link between primitives and monkeys. Natives of the Malagasy Republic, they live up to 20 years.

Liquor issue rejected

Indianola — A liquor-by-the-drink proposal was defeated by Indianola residents by eight votes. Unofficial tally was 94 against and 86 for the issue. There are no absentee ballots to be counted, officials said.

Penney's in Omaha to be razed

Omaha (AP) — The J. C. Penney Co. building in downtown Omaha, vacant since the store closed two years ago, will be torn down and the property used as a parking lot for the time being.

Thomas Moore, executive vice president in the estate and trust department of the Omaha National Bank, said demolition will begin when the wrecker completes demolition of the Hamilton Hotel.

The bank controls the property as trustee of three trust accounts, all involving descendants of the Hayden family.

The adjoining Woolworth store at 16th and Douglas Streets will remain open.

Moore said efforts through real estate firms to lease the property were unsuccessful.

Beatrice park vote is rejected

By Dean Terrill
Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Beatrice — Some three years of controversy over a 40-acre park proposal for northeast Beatrice climaxed Wednesday with a court ruling that it would be improper to hold a city election on the issue.

Gage County District Judge William Rist refused to issue a writ of mandamus forcing the election as requested by city councilman Doug Probst and other park opponents. The lawsuit had been filed against city administrative assistant Terry Doyle, who had refused to certify petitions against the project, first on a technicality and then through a contention that they contained insufficient valid signatures.

Judge Rist found that the petitions did contain more than the required 20% of registered voters for staging an election. But he ruled it would be improper to present the matter at "either a special or general election."

"The law does not intend all actions of the mayor and council to be subject to review by direct election," said the judge in a written opinion, "that process being reserved for the more basic decision of government . . ."

Rist found that 71 signatures had been improperly stricken by Doyle, including 29 signatures of women who had signed their husbands' Christian names. Along with 1,346 signatures which had been accepted, the total declared valid came to 1,417.

Wheat yields spotty to good

By Dominick Costello
Farm Editor

Wheat fields all along the southern two tiers of counties in Nebraska are swarming with combines as farmers rush the wheat crop to elevators and storage bins.

"We will have the bulk of the wheat in within two days if it doesn't rain," said Mrs. Annabell Trumble, manager of the Cooperative Elevator at Eagle.

Yields at Eagle are spotty, all the way from six to 60 bushels an acre, but the average is between 25 and 30, she said. "The quality has been good with test weights from 59 to 61 pounds," Mrs. Trumble added.

At Davey the yields are running under 30 bushels with an occasional field reaching 40 bushels. "It is pretty good wheat with test weights about 59 pounds and moisture below 12%, but the price is poor," said Pete Matulka, manager of the elevator at Davey.

Reports from western Nebraska compiled by the State Labor Department indicate good progress is being made in that area of the state.

At McCook the average yield is from 30 to 45 bushels an acre. Local elevators took in 60,000 bushels, with moisture from 10% to 12.5% and test weights as high as 62 pounds.

At Benkelman the yields were from 30 to 40 bushels an acre with a test weight of 60 pounds. Yields were in the 40-bushel range.

At Stratton the elevator had taken in 24,000 bushels of wheat with a test weight of 60 pound. Yields were in the 40-bushel range.

At Lebanon the elevator had 34,000 bushels of wheat testing 12% moisture and 60 pound test weight. Yields were estimated at near 4 bushels per acre.

At Danbury the elevators had taken between 40,000 to 50,000 bushels of wheat with test weights around 60 pounds.

Association forms to 'dress up' area

By Joe Hudson
Star Staff Writer

About 30 haymarket-area businessmen, artists and merchants Wednesday night formed an association aimed at promoting and revitalizing the area.

But the association stumbled on one of the first orders of business. Members couldn't agree on a name for the new group.

Although the association is temporarily nameless, the general goal is clear — to renovate and dress up the area in a turn-of-the-century motif, attract new businesses and lure shoppers into the area bounded roughly by 7th, 9th, M and Q Sts.

Possible projects in the area were outlined by Keith Royer, a local promotional consultant who spearheaded the group's organizational meeting. He also was chosen head of the association Wednesday.

Royer suggested installing old-style street lamps in the area and wrought-iron fencing along O St. under the Harris overpass. The fencing would replace yellow and black oil drums that line the street.

Other possibilities are a centrally located map and shop directory and cooperative advertising using a wagonwheel logo.

Royer suggested a slogan: "Haymarket — Lincoln's first marketplace, where yesteryear is making a comeback."

Some of the confusion on a name for the group stemmed from the fact that "Lincoln's first marketplace" — a farmers' market established from 9th to 10th and O to P Sts. — was a block east of today's Haymarket area.

Royer also suggested that signs be put in some of the older buildings, telling patrons how the building was used in the late 1800s.

The plan would not draw shoppers away from the central business district, Royer insisted. A revitalized Haymarket would complement downtown business, he said.

Lincoln Center Association officials were on hand to offer advice to the new group. LCA Executive Director Lanford Jorgensen suggested the group eventually go to the city council and form a business improvement district.

The cost of projects in the district would be assessed on a storefront footage basis, Jorgensen said.

Jorgensen also suggested that the group work closely with the Downtown Advisory Committee for help with possible zoning tangles and building ordinance problems.

Jorgansen agreed that "what's good for here (Haymarket) is good for the central business district."

Realtor Bill Kinsey warned that filling the area with quaint, small shops and restaurants, as is generally desired, could be difficult.

Larger manufacturing firms and warehouses enjoy low rent in the area, he said, and will not be eager to relocate.

Yeutter: Money handout no end to world hunger

There's no simple way to cure the world's food problem, a former assistant secretary of agriculture said Wednesday.

Clayton Yeutter, a Lincoln attorney, spoke at the Avery Summer Lecture on world food problems at University of Nebraska-Lincoln, his alma mater.

"We can't say that if we lay out $7 to $8 billion it will end hunger," Yeutter said. "It won't happen. That's too simplistic."

Yeutter advocated economic cures for the food problems by increasing purchasing power for underdeveloped nations.

"There are people in this world who are hungry because they can't afford the food they need," Yeutter said.

He said philanthropy is no substitute for building a strong economy for a developing country.

"Philanthropy is a way to substitute for economic growth, but it's not long term," he said. "Most Americans would rather expand trade than make doles."

He said this country stands behind that edict by having trade deficits in order to buy more from developing countries.

He pointed to Taiwan and South Korea as economies which buy more from the United States than this country ever gave because of past steps to strengthen them.

Lincolnite is charged in theft of plaque from Amtrak station

An 18-year-old Lincolnite was charged Wednesday in connection with the theft of a bronze plaque from the Amtrak station, 7th and P Sts.

Michael J. Watson, 631 N. 68th St., was charged in Lancaster County Court with grand larceny and released on a $1,000 personal recognizance bond.

The 5-by-3-foot plaque valued at about $300, was stolen early Wednesday morning from the south entrance of the building.

Watson's preliminary hearing date is to be set July 12. Charges were pending against another 18-year-old male arrested after the theft.

Burglar's love life suspected

Tulsa, Okla. (AP) — There are no suspects yet in the robbery of the Good Body health food store, but the manager figures the burglar was having trouble with his love life.

Manager Alan Spooner conducted an inventory to find out what was missing and came up with this list: 12 cans of ginseng tea, several quarts of unsweetened papaya juice, several bottles of vitamin C, one container of cashew butter and a small amount of cash.

"It's weird, Spooner said, "especially the ginseng. It's supposed to be an aphrodisiac, you know."

Lincoln girl, 16, killed in Colorado

Services will be Friday for a Lincoln girl killed Tuesday in an auto accident in eastern Colorado.

Kathryn Lynn Neemann, 16, was killed when she was thrown from a car which overturned twice after skidding broadside on a county road near Punkin Center, Colo., the Colorado Patrol reported.

Injured in the accident was another Lincoln girl, Teri Langston, 16. She was being treated at Colorado Springs Community Hospital for a concussion and a broken shoulder.

The patrol said it was not clear which girl was driving. The girls were the only occupants of the car.

Miss Neemann, a Lincoln High School student and a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Neemann, 1441 S. 7th St., a twin brother, Mark, and a brother, Karl.

The funeral will be at 2:30 p.m. Friday at Hodgman-Splain-Roberts Mortuary, 4040 A St. Burial will be at Lincoln Memorial Park.

Coal tax bill Okd

Washington (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee approved a bill which would use a 1% tax on coal production to provide benefits for miners disabled by black lung disease.

Short work made of fire

Corrections officers made short work of a fire in a cell at the city jail Wednesday morning.

An unidentified inmate set two towels, a blanket and a rubber mattress on fire but jail workers extinguished the blaze with a fire extinguisher before firemen arrived.

Exhaust fans were used to remove smoke from the cellblock and no prisoners had to be evacuated, police said.

Four companies escape taxes, halt sought

Washington (AP) — President Carter has been asked to spike federal rulings that have enabled four giant U.S. oil companies to escape paying taxes on income from their oil operations in Saudi Arabia.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said the U.S. Treasury has lost more than $300 million a year as a result of Internal Revenue Service rulings that allow the firms to treat payments to the Saudi government as foreign income taxes.

Grain storage costs incorrect

Under the Public Service Commission's new maximum charges for grain storage, a farmer could pay up to $2.85 to store 100 bushels of grain and $3.45 for 100 bushels of soybeans.

In a story in Wednesday morning's Star, these figures were incorrectly reported as applying to 1,000 bushels.

Dollar vs. yen causes Honda price increase

Detroit (AP) — American Honda Motor Co. is raising U.S. car prices for the second time in as many months because of another drop in the value of the U.S. dollar against the Japanese yen.

The latest price increase will average 4%, or $148 per car.

State's TB rate lowest

United Press International

Because Nebraska has good tuberculosis control, the state in 1976 had the lowest TB rate in the country, Dr. Paul Stoesz, Lincoln, said Wednesday.

"The Legislature enacted a darn good law that permitted the setting up of an excellent program," said Stoesz, director of disease control for the Nebraska Health Department.

With only 58 cases of tuberculosis reported in Nebraska during 1976, Nebraska had the lowest TB rate among the 50 states for the third straight year.

The Nebraska rate was 3.7 cases per 100,000 population, compared to the national rate of 15 per 100,000.

The rate in Nebraska was up last year from the 40 cases reported in 1975, but Stoesz said the increase resulted from stepped up efforts to find and control new cases.

Through the first half of this year, the rate was down approximately 30%, with 20 cases reported compared to 28 during the same period in 1976.

"It looks as if the increased effort last year paid off. We got them treated and that means there are that many fewer cases this year," Stoesz said.

The law also permits the state to pay the cost of medical care for persons with TB who can not afford treatment. "That means the whole bill will be paid, so there is no reason for anyone not to get treated," he said.

"Most tuberculosis is from people who are in a real stricken poverty situation. This is where human health seems to break down," he said.

The state's scattered population also has a lot to do with the low rate.

"We don't have crowding in the metropolitan areas of Lincoln and Omaha, and even there we don't have the bad ghetto areas like other major population centers," Stoesz said.

Medical service grants less than expected

A State Health Department spokesman Wednesday said the recently apprpved federal grants for emergency medical services are significantly less than expected.

Dick Meyer, director of the department's Division of Emergency Health Systems, said the U.S. Public Health Service's grant for two new regional emergency health service systems was more than $600,000 less than the amount requested.

The two new systems, one in Lincoln and the other in Norfolk, each had requested $500,000 to begin operations, Meyer said. The federal grant announced Tuesday totaled $375,000 for both facilities.

In addition, a $500,000 grant was approved for the Panhandle emergency medical system and Omaha's Midlands system for emergency systems improvements.

Meyer said grants for each of the six regional systems have averaged about $375,000 annually over the past few years. He also said the new emergency systems may have to sacrifice some ambulances and communications equipment because of the cut in federal funds.

Extradition next for bus hijacker

Fremont (AP) — A Ypsilanti, Mich., mental hospital escapee is awaiting extradition to Michigan in the Dodge County jail after he forced a Greyhound Bus driver to take him to the Fremont Airport early Tuesday.

Authorities said Jeffrey Ackles, 22, Flint, Mich., claimed to have a gun and asked Omaha bus driver Elwyn Mappes if he wanted to die.

When Mappes replied "no," Ackles told him to stop at the airport. Ackles told the bus driver and airport manager Paul Simms that he had a gun in his pocket.

At the airport, Fremont police and Dodge County sheriff's deputies surrounded Ackles. When Ackles refused to remove his hands from his pocket or to lie down, Fremont Police Chief Fred Whitt grabbed him and held him while officers handcuffed him. No gun was found on Ackles when he was searched.

Vote extends abortion rules

Washington (AP) — The Senate voted 56 to 39 Wednesday night to broaden the conditions under which the federal government will pay for abortions for poor women.

Besides cases where a woman's life would be endangered by a full-term pregnancy, the Senate said federally-funded abortions should be allowed "where medically necessary or for the treatment of rape or incest."

The vote came on the same day that the Supreme Court returned to a lower court the case challenging a restriction on abortion funding that Congress approved in 1976.

A New York federal court judge stayed the restriction, saying it was an unconstitutional infringement on the rights of poor women. The high court said the judge should take another look at his ruling in light of a decision last week saying states have discretion in deciding whether to pay for Medicaid abortions.

The new conditions were written into a $60.7 billion appropriations bill for the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

The vote was on an amendment by Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., to accept those restrictions instead of a set drafted by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Earlier Wednesday, the Senate voted 56 to 42 against a proposal by Rep. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., that would have deleted all restrictions on abortions, including the committee language.

The committee had agreed that abortions should be paid for where a woman's life was at stake, in cases of rape, incest, ectopic pregnancy, kidney disease, multiple sclerosis or where a fetus was likely to suffer deformity or debilitation because of disease.

(Nebraska Sens. Carl Curtis, Republican, and Edward Zorinsky, Democrat, voted against the Brooke and Packwood amendments.)

Brooke maintained that his amendment would cover serious ailments that the committee's language failed to include.

An attempt by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N. M., to weaken the Brooke amendment failed 58 to 36. Domenici, who favored strict limits on abortion funding, claimed that Brooke's reference to medical necessity was vague and "we don't know what that means.

"He would say trust the doctor. I assume that all the abortions they have been performing were medically necessary," Domenici argued.

The vote on Brooke's amendment places the Senate in conflict with the House over the abortion question for the second straight year. The House voted earlier this month to bar federally funded abortions under any conditions.

The vote came on the same day that the Supreme Court returned to a lower court a case challenging a restriction on abortion funding that Congress approved in 1976.

This restriction, known as the Hyde amendment, said abortions under such federal programs as Medicaid should be paid for only when a woman's life would be in jeopardy because of a full-term pregnancy.

A New York federal court judge stayed the restriction, saying it was an unconstitutional infringement on the rights of poor women.

Packwood argued that Congress should adopt the Supreme Court's view and leave abortion as a question to be resolved between a woman and her physician. To deny poor women abortions because the practice is thought immoral is "a disdainful, haughty arrogance that should demean this Congress," he said.

"It is not the business of government to put its particular stamp of morality on abortion," he said.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., advanced the argument that abortion is a means of population control, a field in which the United States has traditionally taken the lead.

"As the rest of the world is catching up with our leadership in this area, suddenly we become regressive, we become emotional," he said.

But Helms described abortion as "the deliberate termination of an innocent human life." He warned that it could lead "to disposing of other socially or politically undesirable" persons.

The Supreme Court decision had no direct impact on the Hyde amendment, which still cannot be enforced for the time being. The appropriations bill to which it was attached expires Sept. 30.

York youth found guilty

By Michael Holmes
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

York — Seventeen-year-old Ricky A. Johnson was found guilty of second degree murder Wednesday night by an eight-woman, four-man jury.

The York High School junior was convicted in the April 22 rifle slaying of York policeman James M. Richardson II, 24, who was answering a disturbance call at the Johnson family home.

The jury returned the verdict at 9:58 p.m.

Johnson showed no emotion as the verdict was read, slowly chewing gum as he sat with his attorneys.

The courtroom had been filled to near its 70-person capacity Wednesday morning during final arguments. As the verdict was read at 10:10 p.m., however, only Johnson's parents, reporters and a single spectator observed.

Richardson, an ex-Marine, had served with the York police force for 10 months before his death. His death apparently was the first time a York law enforcement officer had ever been slain in the line of duty.

The shooting occurred about 10:35 p.m., on the front lawn of the Arbor Drive Baptist Church, across the street from the Johnson home.

The officer was shot once with a .22 caliber, hollow point bullet that pierced his chest a fraction of an inch above his bulletproof vest.

During the eight-day trial, witnesses testified that the slaying occurred after Johnson quarreled with his mother, fired five shots into the front window of his home and ran toward the church yard.

The youth surrendered to authorities about an hour after the shooting and has been held without bond since.

His trial began June 20, after two attempts to have the case transferred to juvenile court. Twice the youth was ruled an adult and was convicted as such.

Conviction of second degree murder carries a sentence of 10 years to life imprisonment. District Court Judge William Norton told Johnson Wednesday night he would set a date for sentencing within 24 hours.

The youth had been charged with first degree murder. Before the jury began deliberating, however, Norton instructed them they could find the youth guilty of first degree murder, second degree murder, manslaughter or not guilty.

Mrs. June Johnson was in tears as the verdict against her son was read.

Chief defense attorney John Brogan asked that the jury be polled about the verdict.

Clerk Jeanne Yowell asked each of the 12 jurors, "Is this your verdict?"

"Yes," came the reply 12 times.

Johnson watched the jury as each juror confirmed the verdict. Again he showed no emotion.

Judge Norton told the youth, "You will be instructed when next to appear in court." Johnson nodded silently.

Asked whether an appeal of the conviction is being considered, Brogan declined comment.

During closing arguments Wednesday morning, Deputy County Attorney Vince Valentino told the jury, "There is no question this case will test your courage." Valentino told of the argument between Johnson and his mother over a drink of beer Johnson gave to a 13-year-old friend of his sister.

"It wasn't just any argument," Valentino said of the quarrel in which Johnson and his mother struck one another. "It was a bad argument."

Valentino maintained that, Mrs. Johnson told her son during the quarrel that she was calling the police.

The prosecutor theorized that after firing the shots into his house, Johnson crossed the street, hid behind a bus parked in the church parking lot and waited for police to arrive.

Johnson testified that he sat down, crying, behind the church building. He said he had begun to return home to make certain everything was all right, when his rifle accidentally discharged.

He testified that he did not see Richardson until the officer was lying face down on the ground.

"There's no way he (Johnson) intended to kill him," Brogan said in his summation. "I ask you, I beg you not to find this young man guilty of first degree murder or second degree murder."

Tune in tomorrow

Buffalo, N.Y. (UPI) — As the world turns, two college professors are asking for a grant of up to $500,000 to scrutinize TV soap operas.

Dr. Mary B. Cassata, a mass communications professor at the State University of New York at Buffalo said she and Dr. Kenneth Haun, an experimental psychologist at Monmouth College, are drafting a grant proposal to "systematically study soap operas and audience reaction to them."

"For many years people have poked fun at soap operas in terms of the acting and material the actors had to work with," Dr. Cassata explained at the edge of night. "But in actuality, some of the best acting and writing goes into each episode."

Mrs. DeMuth may be oldest Nebraskan ever.

Adams County farmwife is 111—yes, 111—today

By Dean Terrill
Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Ayr — Mrs. Sophia DeMuth will do something today which possibly no Nebraskan has ever done before. She will turn 111.

Right, 111.

For several years the Adams Countian has been accepted as the state's most senior senior. Moreover, an inch-thick Lincoln Star file of centenarians for some time back shows nobody else attaining that incredible "five score plus 10 plus one."

Apparently coming closest in the past decade at least was Mrs. Martha Aldrich of Brock, who was 109 at the time of her death eight years ago. And 1976 saw the demise of a 108-year-old, Mrs. Ida Kiplinger of Holdrege, and of 107-year-old Ada Burton of Omaha.

The Nebraska Commission on Aging keeps no such records, but one representative did think he'd heard of a male Falls Citian who is 114. "No way," said a spokesman for the Falls City Journal, "or we'd know of that guy for sure."

Living on a farm with one of her three daughters, Mrs. DeMuth has virtually lost her sight. But she is amazingly alert, hears well, has 30 years fewer wrinkles than you'd expect — and says pills are only for the ailing.

"Mama never was one to take medicine and she still isn't," said daughter Mrs. Emma Hunter of Hastings. "In fact, both the folks were pretty much abstainers in everything, except Papa did drink a little coffee."

For years Mrs. DeMuth and her late husband, Oliver, were almost legendary in this area. Two years older than his wife, he died in 1965 at age 101

Though her family shields her from the press and other visitors now. Mrs. DeMuth has often told how Oliver came courting her by bicycle "from Hastings all the way to St. Joe." Then a newcomer from Illinois, he had met Sophia while visiting relatives in her native St. Joseph, Mo. In addition to the bike trip, he had made several visits via horse and buggy.

Another favorite recollection is Mrs. DeMuth's acquaintance with Jesse James, who grew up "about three blocks away." She well remembers when he was shot, also in St. Joe, in 1882

Frequently in her garden until about five years ago, the centenarian-plus mostly credits her longevity to hard work. But perhaps more of a factor, according to family members, was the way she handled crises.

"If she got all keyed up about something," recalled Mrs. Hunter, "she would go out and raise hell cleaning the chicken house or something"

The couple was married in 1899 and a few years later Oliver built the still-attractive farm house, 2½ miles northeast of Ayr, which his wife continues to call home. Jennie DeMuth, another daughter, not only looks after her mother but keeps up a park-size yard of flowers.

The other children are Joe DeMuth, who farms nearby, and Mrs. Marie Fulkerson of St Joe. The four grandchildren, all Joe's offspring, are Jerry, John and Jennie Lynn of the home and Mrs Lewis (Joanne) Seberg of Lincoln.

"Mother was 33 before she was married," said Mrs. Hunter. "She tells us she never would have lived so long if she had been a child bride like so many girls were then."

Relations with Peking said top U.S. priority

New York (UPI) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said Wednesday the United States is committed to move toward normal relations with Peking as "a central part of our foreign policy."

In an address prepared for delivery to the Asia Society, Vance said "progress may not be easy or immediately evident," but he will pursue that commitment when he meets with Communist Chinese leaders in Peking during a five-day visit that starts Aug. 22.

"We consider friendly relations with China to be a central part of our foreign policy," he said. "China's role in maintaining world peace is vital."

In what seemed a veiled warning to the Soviet Union, which has been at bitter odds with Peking for years, Vance said, "In structuring our relationship with the Chinese, we will not enter into any agreement with others that are directed against the people's Republic of China."

The comments were part of a broad review of U.S. Asian policy in which Vance said "The United States is and will remain an Asian and Pacific power."

He made no direct mention the Republic of China on Taiwan, Peking's nationalist rival, nor of the U.S.-Taiwan defense treaty.

The people's Republic says the United States must sever relations with the Taipei government as a condition for normal Washington-Peking relations.

He noted only that the 1972 "Shanghai Communique" states that "there is but one China," and said the United States envisages peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question by the Chinese themselves.

The Shanghai Communique spelled out the guidelines for U.S.-Peoples Republic relations at the conclusion of President Richard Nixon's historic 1972 visit.

Vance said U.S. policy toward China "will continue to be guided by the principles of the Shanghai Communique, and on that basis we shall seek to move toward full normalization of relations . . .

"As we prepare to go to Peking, we recognize that progress may not be easy of immediately evident. But this administration is committed to the process, and we are approaching the talks in Peking with that in mind"

"After 25 years of confrontation, we are carrying on a constructive dialogue with the People's Republic of China," he said.

"Vast differences in culture, social systems, ideology and foreign policy still separate our two countries. But the Chinese and American people no longer face each other with the hostility, misunderstanding and virtually complete separation that existed for two decades."

Abducted Girl Scout calls home

Sarasota, Fla. (AP) — A 15-year-old girl abducted from a Girl Scout camp early Wednesday by a man who ripped through the back of her tent telephoned her father late in the night and said she was all right and would be released soon.

The girl, Charlotte Grosse, was apparently in good condition 17 hours after her abduction, said Sheriff Jim Hardcastle.

"The father just got a telephone call from his daughter," Hardcastle said. "She said she was in Bradenton."

He said she was with a man who was "going to get rid of her at a telephone booth" where she could call home.

Bradenton is about 30 miles north of the wooded campsite in a remote state park from which Charlotte was dragged by the hair screaming into the predawn darkness.

He said that when Charlotte called, from a telephone booth, she did not sound frightened or alarmed, adding that she and her father apparently were able to improvise a hasty code.

Charlotte told her father the abductor was wearing blue jeans, sneakers and had a mustache, the sheriff said, and was driving an old blue car. Earlier, investigators had found prints from a sneaker-clad foot at the rear of the torn tent.

"She said she was all right, that he just wanted to get rid of her," said Cpl. Ray Pilon.

Charlotte, clad only in underclothes and a Mickey Mouse T-shirt, was dragged from her tent by a tall, heavy-set man about an hour before sunrise Wednesday, police said. Her sister, 14-year-old Eleanor, and another Girl Scout who shared the tent watched in horror, and Eleanor screamed: "Charlotte's been stolen!"

More than 100 searchers, their arms linked, had stepped slowly through the surrounding, sharp-pointed palmetto scrub in an intensive hunt during the day. Men with tracking dogs scouted the area while helicopters hovered overhead.

At nightfall, when no trace of Charlotte or her abductor had been found, the search was called off.

Deputies said they knew of no motive for the attack.

Earlier this month, three Girl Scouts were sexually assaulted and then murdered at a camp in Locust Grove, Okla. Authorities have charged 33-year-old prison escapee Gene Leroy Hart in the June 13 slayings and are still searching for him.

Wednesday's abduction here touched off an immediate manhunt. Law enforcement officers, volunteers, a mounted posse and Florida Power & Light Co service trucks joined the search that was set up under the sheriff's specialized weapons and tactics unit known as SWAT.

The girl's father, Richard Grosse, a power company lineman, joined the searchers.

The park is located two miles south of the tiny town of Osprey and 12 miles south of Sarasota on U.S. 41.

The Girl Scouts were camping in an area near the northeastern border of the park just north of the main pavillion which is reached only by a narrow dirt road and is surrounded on three sides by thick scrub.

Nader plans 'Nickel Brigade' to lobby for consumer agency

Washington (UPI) — Ralph Nader asked the public Wednesday to shower nickels on Congress in an effort to save the proposed Consumer Protection Agency and threatened the unprecedented step of personally campaigning against those who oppose its creation.

"This is a battle that is not going to be lost," Nader said at a news conference.

He said his Congress Watch and the Consumer Federation of America, the nation's largest organized consumer group, will campaign in the districts of at least 78 House members who are "wavering" on the issue. They will have the backing of 90 labor and public interest groups, he said.

If the bill fails, Nader said, he will campaign before next year's elections in the districts of congressmen who are yielding to "sheer special interest power" against the agency.

Voters are being urged to send a letter to the "wavering" congressmen, along with one nickel each — the amount Nader said the proposed agency with its $15 million annual budget will cost each taxpayer per year.

The goal of the "Nickel Brigade" is to get 500 letters from each district by Aug. 1, or whenever the House takes up the bill.

Of the 78 house members on the initial list, 45% have voted for the agency in the past, 75% are Democrats and 55% are in either their first or second term in Congress. Both the House and Senate passed the bill last year but it died in conference under a veto threat from then President Gerald Ford.

This year Carter has promised to sign the legislation but support has evaporated in the House. Senate Leaders refused to call the measure up until the House has acted.

Nader contends the agency would correct the "imbalance in consumer advocacy" in Washington by lobbying for the consumer in regulatory agency decisions where heatlh, safety and pocketbook issues are concerned.

Opponents, primarily the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, see it as an unnecessary new arm of government which will further muddy the regulatory waters.

"In many ways this is a milestone for the consumer movement," said Nader, sitting in front of a fishbowl partially filled with nickels.

He said the effort is an unprecedented political intrusion which will help the consumer movement develop a grass roots structure of a type it has not had before.

He called the project the "ultimate litmus test" for next year's elections during which he might personally campaign, a political action he has never taken before.

New gonorrhea vaccine to fight 'epidemic' rate

Pittsburgh (UPI) — A new vaccine against gonorrhea — the no. 1 infectious disease of epidemic proportions — has been developed by University of Pittsburgh scientists.

Dr. Charles C. Brinton said the vaccine could reduce a person's chances of getting gonorrhea from the present rate of 30% per contact to about 1%.

The vaccine's main ingredient is a series of hairlike appendages called pili, which gonorrhea bacteria use to move themselves over moist surfaces and stick to tissues.

When the pili are injected into men and women, Brinton said, antibodies are formed that inactivate them. The antibodies confer immunity against gonorrhea.

In initial phases of the research, Brinton reported success in lab tests where he and several colleagues were injected with the venereal disease.

The vaccine will be tested on 50 to 100 persons beginning this fall. If the tests show the substance is safe and produces antibodies against gonorrhea, it will be tried on thousands of people beginning next summer, Brinton said.

After his initial success in testing humans, Brinton was going to conduct further tests on chimpanzees, believed to be the only creatures other than man to get the venereal disease.

"Until now, scientists had felt confident that chimpanzees do get gonorrhea," he said.

Brinton discovered, however, that chimpanzees don't develop gonorrhea after all. Although the gonorrhea bacteria penetrates their bodies, Britton said the chimpanzees do not develop symptoms of the disease.

Execution banned for rape

Washington (AP) — The Supreme Court banned use of the death penalty for the crime of rape Wednesday and indicated that capital punishment may be an invalid penalty for any crime but murder.

The court voted 7-2 to strike down the death penalty imposed on condemned Georgia rapist Ehrlich Anthony Coker. A majority of six justices ruled that rape may never be punished by death.

Although the decision affects only six of the 350 prisoners on death rows, it may have a profound impact on the history of capital punishment in the United States.

Had the court decided that states may impose the death penalty for crimes in which the life of the victim is not taken, its reasoning could have opened the door for future rulings that capital punishment is an appropriate penalty for such crimes as treason, espionage, hijacking, terrorism or kidnaping.

The court also set aside a federal judge's decision that cutting off federal money for abortions for poor women was unconstitutional.

The high court sent the case back to U.S. District Court Judge John Dooling in Brooklyn, N.Y., with orders that he restudy his ruling in light of the Supreme Court's June 20 decision that states are not obliged to pay for medically unnecessary abortions.

Reaction to the rape ruling was mixed but some women's groups that have been crusading for rape crisis centers and a crackdown on rapists said that severe penalties have hampered attempts to convict rapists.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, said "rape is a serious and heinous crime and should be severely punished. But the fact is that judges and juries aren't convicting." With less severe penalties, she said, NOW hopes that more rapists will be convicted.

A Chicago-based group, Women Against Rape, said "We never advocated more severe penalties. Judges are reluctant to put rapists away for what judges think are relatively minor acts. In Illinois, rape carries a 4 to 20-year sentence and this is hard to convict on."

The American Civil Liberties Union, which opposes the death penalty under any circumstances, noted that 405 of the 455 people executed for rape have been black and said that "today's decision means that this grevious example of racial prejudice may no longer flourish."

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who along with Justice William H. Rehnquist voted that the death penalty is a valid punishment for rape, said in a dissenting opinion, "The clear implication of today's holding appears to be that the death penalty may be properly imposed only as to crimes resulting in death of the victim."

The court's majority opinion was written by Justice Byron R. White, and was joined by Justices Potter Stewart, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, who oppose the death penalty for any crime, concurred.

Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. voted to overturn Coker's death sentence but said that under certain circumstances a rapist should be subject to a death sentence.

White's opinion said, "Rape is without doubt deserving of serious punishment but in terms of moral depravity and of the injury to the person and to the public, it does not compare with murder, which does involve the unjustified taking of human life."

White said the death penalty for rape is "grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime," and therefore imposes unconstitutional cruel and unusual punishment.

The court had never before struck down the death penalty as unconstitutional for a specific crime.

In 1972, the court struck down the death penalty as then applied by all states with capital punishment laws on their books. The court said the death penalty was being applied capriciously and arbitrarily — and therefore was cruel and unusual.

Many state legislatures wrote new laws. Last July 2 the court voted 7-2 in cases from Florida, Georgia and Texas that the death penalty may, under certain guidelines, be used as a punishment for murder. Brennan and Marshall dissented.

Coker was convicted of the 1974 rape of a 16-year-old Waycross, Ga., housewife. The night of the crime, Coker had escaped from a state prison where he was serving a life term for rape, kidnaping and murder.

A spokesman for Georgia's prison system said that the court's decision means Coker will be eligible for parole in seven years.

Georgia was the only state in which the crime of raping an adult woman was punishable by death. Other states, however, have laws making the rape of children under 12 years of age a capital crime.

In its last day on the bench until October, the court also sent back to lower courts, in separate 6-3 votes, school desegregation cases from Milwaukee and Omaha.

The court said those cases were to be studied again to determine if the widespread busing and other measures ordered by the lower courts was justified.

In Omaha, an order by U.S. District Judge Albert G. Schatz last school year made necessary the busing of more than 10,000 pupils.

In Milwaukee, a ruling by the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals requires by next school year the busing of nearly 9,000 pupils.

Ruling doesn't end Omaha busing

Omaha (AP) — Racial integration busing to Omaha public schools will not necessarily end because of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling Wednesday vacating a busing plan ordered by a lower court, Omaha officials and legal sources said.

A federal appellate court was instructed by the high court to reconsider its approval of an Omaha desegregation plan which required the busing of more than 10,000 students during the past school term. About 20% of the city's 60,000 school children are black.

While school board officials expressed pleasure at the court's ruling, the attorney who represented 32 black citizens who brought the suit that led to the busing order was downcast.

"It's bad news," said Robert Broom of the Omaha Legal Aid Society. "We are probably faced with a very difficult task, to reconstruct what would have been" if the school board had not taken actions that the lower court found unconstitutional in ordering the busing, Broom siad.

School Board member Don Cunningham called the ruling "wonderful" and school board attorney Kenneth Holm said, "Good."

Supt. Owen Knutzen said, "I think we have to wait and see what the 8th Circuit Court decides" when it reconsiders the Omaha case.

However, he said, the Supreme Court ruling "would indicate there was some concurrence with the arguments that the Board of Education expressed in their appeal."

What will happen to the district's integration plan this fall "is completely and totally unknown" Knutzen said.

The Omaha World-Herald quoted legal sources who said the Appeals Court would not necessarily decide against busing for Omaha when it rehears the case.

"It doesn't automatically mean that the Circuit Court of Appeals will change the integration plan," one source said. "It (the Supreme Court ruling) means that the court will review it and possibly hear legal arguments, but not necessarily."

The source said the appeals court could analyze the Dayton, Ohio, plan ruled on by the Supreme Court Monday and apply the ruling to the Omaha case; could change the guidelines for Omaha, which could mean fewer students would be bused; or could send the case back to Omaha federal district court.

Rape ruling may increase number of convictions

Hastings (AP) — Jill Fenner, coordinator for the Omaha area Rape Crisis Counseling Center, said Wednesday the Supreme Court decision banning capital punishment in adult rape cases may result in an increase in convictions for the crime.

Ms. Fenner said many juries are reluctant to convict accused rapists if the penalty is death. She said statistics show that "when the death penalty is involved" juries tend not to convict.

She added that the crisis center in Omaha and the Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women had lobbied for change in the sexual assault laws in 1975.

She said several groups requested a reduction in the maximum penalty for rape from 50 to 25 years "in order to get more convictions."

She said it is too early to tell if the reduction has indeed resulted in more convictions.

Ms. Fenner said the number of convictions is up, but that the number of arrests for sexual assault have also increased since the new penalty was enacted in late August of 1975.

Breakfast not worthy of guest

Washington (AP) — When is breakfast not breakfast?

When it's served to visitors at the White House, according to Rep. Otis G. Pike, D-N.Y.

Pike said he has been the guest of Jimmy Carter as a member of the House Ways and Means Committee and breakfast just hasn't lived up to expectations

Anticipating a hearty meal fit for a farmer, said Pike, he ended up settling for "orange juice, coffee and a Danish. If one chooses to be boorish, one can get two Danish."

The White House doesn't rate a star for ambience either, the congressman added

"One visualizes the crisp white linens, the sparkling crystal, the crested silverware — all of the accoutrements of gracious living "

But what one gets, Pike said, is a state dining room in which the tables have been removed to give the appearance of a lecture hall.

Rock-throwing used to slow cars

Detroit (UPI) — Residents of a Polish-Ukranian neighborhood on the city's northeast side have become so angry with speeding motorists that some have begun pelting cars with rocks.

"It works," said Patricia Chernishkin, chairman of the local block club.

Nothing else has, she said.

"I've seen people jump out in the street and scream at cars," Mrs. Chernishkin said. "But, of course, they don't listen."

The rock-throwing brigade went to work just a few weeks ago, and already the situation has improved.

"So far, we've been pretty effective," said one woman who asked not to be identified for fear of retaliation. "I would guess we've put some pretty nasty dents in quite a few cars. My husband has a good arm."

The neighborhood group has concentrated on seven intersections on two different streets — none of which has stop signs.

It has even made its own stop signs — in English and Polish — that will be erected if state highway officials don't step in first.

Mrs. Chernishkin said drivers have been using the neighborhood as a virtual racetrack for years.

"We're really afraid somebody will get killed," she said. "We have two schools right near here and lots of kids on the streets."

The rock throwing has not been officially sanctioned. Police apparently are not even aware of it.

Mrs. Chernishkin said she thinks it would be difficult for the speeders to complain.

"They'd have to say, 'Gee, I was driving down the street at 70 miles an hour and somebody threw a rock and dented my car.'

"They're committing a worse crime," Mrs. Chernishkin said. "A car can hurt somebody a lot more than a rock."

Of the rock throwers, she said, "They don't aim at the windows — they're just trying to scare them so they'll stop driving through the neighborhood and stop speeding all the time.

"It's not like everybody in the neighborhood is out there throwing rocks. But some people have gotten angry enough and done just that."

Canada upset over pollution

(c) Newhouse News Service

Washington — Air pollution from America's coal-fired electric power plants is fouling the skies over Canada in what amounts to an "environmental time-bomb," Canada's environmental chief says.

Voicing concern over the long-range transport of air pollutants through the atmosphere, Canadian Environmental Minister Romeo LeBlanc warned that any serious damage from pollution fall-out is likely to cloud relations between Canada and the United States.

He told the annual meeting of the Air Pollution Control Association that the two countries have been "negligent" in resolving environmental differences.

He said Canada is concerned about the likelihood of increased air pollution resulting from the conversion of many power plants in the United States from oil to high-sulfur coal.

The tendency of many utilities to build tall stacks as a device for reducing air pollution in the United States has increased the long-range transport of pollutants into Canada while reducing pollution near the power plants, he said.

Air pollution reaching Canada from sources in the United States is five times the quantity being transported to this country from Canadian sources, he said.

He added, "Continued long-range transport of pollutants holds grave implications for forests, wildlife, water quality and aquatic life, agriculture and public health."

LeBlance said Canada wants to begin bilateral talks with the Carter administration on the air pollution problem before many more utilities shift to coal.

The pollution problem, he said, can only be resolved if both nations agree to the principle that the polluter pays for whatever damage results from fall-out. He said the principle, adopted by some Canadian provinces, is both "equitable and economically sound."

While more scientific research needs to be done on the effects of long-range pollution transport, efforts to reduce pollution at its source should take place immediately on the political level, he said.

One approach might be to make air pollution standards tough enough to protect distant regions affected by the pollution. Another possible solution is to require utilities to install flue-gas scrubbers that reduce pollution at its source and preclude the need for tall stacks.

Nazi march in Jewish suburb unlikely

Chicago (AP) — Lawyers for an American Nazi group said Wednesday the group probably will call off its Fourth of July march through Skokie, a predominantly Jewish Chicago suburb.

After a court hearing, Nazi leader Frank Collin said he and his stormtroopers would march through Skokie only if it is legal.

"We won't break any laws," said Collin, son of a German Jew who survived a Nazi death camp.

Collin's statement was contrary to what he said Tuesday, when he said the march "is still definitely on — even if I have to break the law."

David Hamlin of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has represented the Nazis, said Collin's decision not to break the law means there are only two chances the march will occur July 4: "Slim and none."

Collin's group is prohibited from marching by an injunction handed down by a Circuit Court and by three Skokie ordinances.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ordered the Illinois Appellate Court to review the injunction, but arguments on that issue are not scheduled until July 8.

Furthermore, Collin and his attorneys have not challenged the three Skokie ordinances which also would have the effect of banning the march.

"Collin has told us he will do nothing that will lead to his arrest in Skokie," Hamlin said.

Collin had planned to march with followers dressed in Nazi uniforms through Skokie, which has an estimated 7,000 survivors of Nazi Germany concentration camps.

A Nazi spokesman, Michael Whalen, said Skokie was selected "to demonstrate that we're not allowed to speak in Chicago or Skokie or other suburbs. And we feel the Jews are behind all this."

Declining raw farm product prices are first for year

Washington (UPI) — Declining prices for soybeans, cattle, corn, wheat, vegetables and fruit sent the average of all raw farm product prices down 5% in the month ending June 15, the first drop this year, the Agriculture Department reported Wednesday.

The decline, measuring prices at the farm level before commodities flow into the food industry pipeline for processing and eventual delivery to consumers, broke a string of five monthly increases which lifted the farm price average 8.9% between last December 15 and May 15. It left the average prices 6% below a year earlier, but 2.7% above last December.

The lower prices for soybeans, cattle and other commodities were partly offset by gains for hogs and dairy products, the department's Crop Reporting Board said.

Soybean prices averaged $8.18 per bushel for the month, according to the report. This compared with $9.40 in mid-May and $6.16 a year ago.

Cattle prices slumped to $34.10 a hundredweight compared with $36.10 a month earlier and $36.40 a year ago. Corn prices dropped from $2.21 a bushel in May to $2.09 compared with $2.74 a year earlier.

At the same time, an index of farm costs fell 0.5% and was 5% above a year earlier. Officials, comparing the trends in commodity prices and production costs, said farmers' prices averaged 67% of the "fair" parity level in mid-June compared with 70% a month ago and 74% a year ago.

Agriculture officials said retail food prices, which averaged 4.3% above a year earlier from January through May, should now advance more slowly through the rest of the year if farmers get continued good growing weather.

For all of 1977, experts predict a 6% increase in grocery prices — about double the 1976 gain but still well below the 8.5% rise of 1975 and the 14.5% gains of 1973-74.

The volatile farm price index helps point toward future trends in consumer food prices. But it does not always indicate immediate changes at the retail level, partly because retail prices are affected heavily by processing and other marketing costs.

Also, economists said 60% of all retail food price increases posted from last December through May were due to imported products like coffee and fish which are not measured by the agriculture crop price reports.

While cattle declined, hog prices rose from $40.70 per hundred-weight in May to $41.90 in Mid-June compared with $49.20 a year ago.

But wheat growers harvesting a bumper crop in the face of an already-heavy surplus saw their prices fall from $2.29 a bushel on May 15 to $2 a bushel in mid-June compared to $3.42 a year earlier.

The wheat price was below government support levels. Farmers have been appealing for government action to raise the income support payments for which they will be eligible.

A department price index for vegetables fell 9% during the month, with all vegetables except asparagus declining, but was 4% above a year earlier.

The index of meat animal prices was down 3% and was 9% below a year earlier. Indexes for food grains and feed grains and hay declined 7% with the food grain index 37% under a year ago and the feed grain index 21% below a year earlier.

Indexes for fruit and oil bearing crops, although both declined for the month, were 25% and 29% above a year earlier respectively.

Nebraska women's conference: worthy goals obscured

Women's rights advocates were ambushed in Lincoln last Sunday, giving rise to frustration and bitterness both natural to losers of an emotional battle, and understandable.

As they see it, the larger issue of justice and equality for American women was subverted by passionate advocates of much narrower causes.

As they see it, the slate of delegates elected at last weekend's Nebraska Women's Meeting does not represent the broad spectrum of thought of Nebraska women.

They are frustrated and angered by what they allege to be institutional bases of support for the anti-ERA and anti-abortion forces, and they are dismayed at the divisions among women in general and within the feminist movement in particular.

And they fear that what happened in Nebraska — the election of a 100% "pro-life, pro-family, pro-America" slate to the National Women's Conference in Houston later this year — will happen on a larger scale, resulting in policy recommendations to the President and the Congress contrary to all for which the women's movement has fought.

The feminists accurately assess the events at the Kellogg Center last weekend and their fears for the future are not without foundation.

Frankly, we are astonished at the political naivete of feminists here, many of whom knew the opposition would be organized, but who did little to effectively counteract that organization. They were out-organized, out-hustled, and beaten within the letter of the law. Cries of "foul" can be ignored.

Yet they are right about the Nebraska delegation not reflecting accurately the beliefs and aspirations of all Nebraska women. For many of them, justice and equality are the overriding concerns, and rightly so.

If those concerns are not expressed in Houston, an historic opportunity will be lost.

It is hoped that fears, hatreds and prejudices will give way to a rational assessment of the status of women and concerted efforts to achieve equality and justice for women where they are denied them. But the specter of women divided does little to encourage that hope.

More judicial tampering

People opposed to busing to achieve racial balance in schools are given to complaining about "judicial tampering" and "social experimentation."

We're not wild about busing school children away from their neighborhoods, either. But we see it as a useful if last resort tool in attempting to right long-standing inequal opportunities. We also wonder about "judicial tampering" and "social experimentation."

In this case, we wonder about the U.S. Supreme Court ruling this week ordering the Eighth Circuit Court to review the busing order affecting Omaha.

The high court said the appeals court must design a remedy to redress only the racial segregation which was caused intentionally.

We thought that was covered in the relief granted earlier.

Omaha, much of its civic leadership notwithstanding, has adapted well to the busing order and integration there seems to be proceeding as smoothly as could be expected.

Will more "judicial tampering" undo what progress has been made during this first year of the busing plan?

In this we see only the possibility of more hardship for the children. They have been the victims all along — in the segregation of schools in this country, in the efforts to desegregate them, and now in efforts to place obstacles in the path of desegregation efforts.

The court should have left well enough alone.

Why downplay differences?

The State Department is trying to minimize differences the U.S. may have with its ally, Israel. We're not entirely sure why the differences should be minimized.

The Carter administration has adopted a policy, reaffirmed this week, of proposing that Israel pull back to pre-1967 boundaries.

The policy seeks several ends: to take the wind out of the new Israeli prime minister's sails, should he prove to be the hard bargainer he is reputed to be; to inject an even American hand in the Middle East and to get peace talks off dead center. The President is said to be convinced that only through dramatic concessions can a peace agreement be struck.

So why is the State Department downplaying Israeli-U.S. differences over the policy? That will only serve to confuse the situation. It will not serve the cause of peace in the long run.

Key to recession

Marquis Childs

Washington — What passes for speech in the Senate today is, for the most part, dreary and empty. Normally perhaps only a dozen members of that exclusive body are on the floor at any given time and their attention to what a senator happens to be reading — a marked change in the rules that once forbade written speeches — is indifferent.

The other day, however, a carefully prepared speech that ventured some stern thoughts on the unthinkable shook up both Republicans and Democrats. The speaker, Sen. Jacob Javits, was a member of the delegation headed by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to the conference on International Economic Co-operation — popularly known as the North-South Conference — in Paris.

While Javits did not put undue stress on the failure of that conference to reach any meaningful agreement between the developed and developing nations, he left no doubt of the intensity of his feelings about the related question of the strains on the International Monetary System. Those strains, Javits said, threaten the United States and the world with a deeper recession than that of 1974 or a full-scale depression in 1979-80.

Privately, he told senators who congratulated him that unless action comes quickly to meet at least some of the demands from the developing countries, containing three-fourths of the world's population, we will see a depression that will scorch your hair. Very little attention has been paid to the disillusionment of the developing countries over the lack of results at the conference and not a word of Javits' warning got into the prints.

The root of the trouble is the way in which the developing nations have undertaken to solve their grave balance of payments deficits, growing in large part out of the quadrupling of oil prices by the OPEC countries, through private and government borrowing. Private bank loans to these countries total more than $70 billion, of which $42 billion is from U.S. banks.

This skirts on the delicate ground of continuing reports of the excess of loans by the big New York banks to the poor nations. Whether these loans can be repaid or even recycled is a question raised only in off-stage whispers.

The basic points Javits made is that the OPEC countries are free to deposit their billions of dollars in surplus revenue in the banks of strong industrialized nations. Then these banks have felt obligated to loan to poor nations to make up for their payments deficits. Statistics published by the Federal Reserve, Javits noted, show that for the United States alone bank claims of only two years' maturity in the non-oil-developing nations total over $13 billion.

The debt to governments by these same nations is $80 billion, of which $29 billion is owed to the United States. This staggering accumulation, both private and government, grows out of a system — if indeed such an improvisation can be called a system — that cannot long continue.

One of the dismaying aspects of the North-South Conference was the refusal of the developing nations to give anything reciprocally for the large amounts of aid they are demanding. That is, increase the volume of commodities they can sell on the world market, improve agricultural production, curb the domination of narrow elites and, above all, increase family planning in order to put a brake on the population explosion. To comply fully with the demands of the developing nations, U.S. aid would have to be tripled.

The net flow of private funds to developing countries continues with the total $23 billion in 1976, most of it financed by banks. International financing systems are so strained by this arrangement, according to the senator, that some banks in certain countries are fully "loaned up."

The U.S. import of oil, greater than for any other country, must be cut back to reduce the unbalance in international payments. The danger is so great, Javits said, that even gasoline rationing cannot be ruled out.

One essential is to bring private enterprise in the developed countries into play using the multi-national corporations which have been regularized following revelation of abuses. By an interesting coincidence, about the time Javits was speaking, the president of the Ford Motor Company, Lee A. Iacocca, in an address to the Swiss-American Chamber of Commerce in Zurich, was talking about the need to raise the economic level of the Third World through the instrument of the multi-national corporation.

How much of a dent this will make on public opinion is highly questionable. At a recent press conference, President Carter remarked that with the start of the tourist season, the use of gasoline will reach a record high of 7.7 million barrels a day. We seem to take it for granted that we can use the major share of the world's resources without regard to what may happen elsewhere.

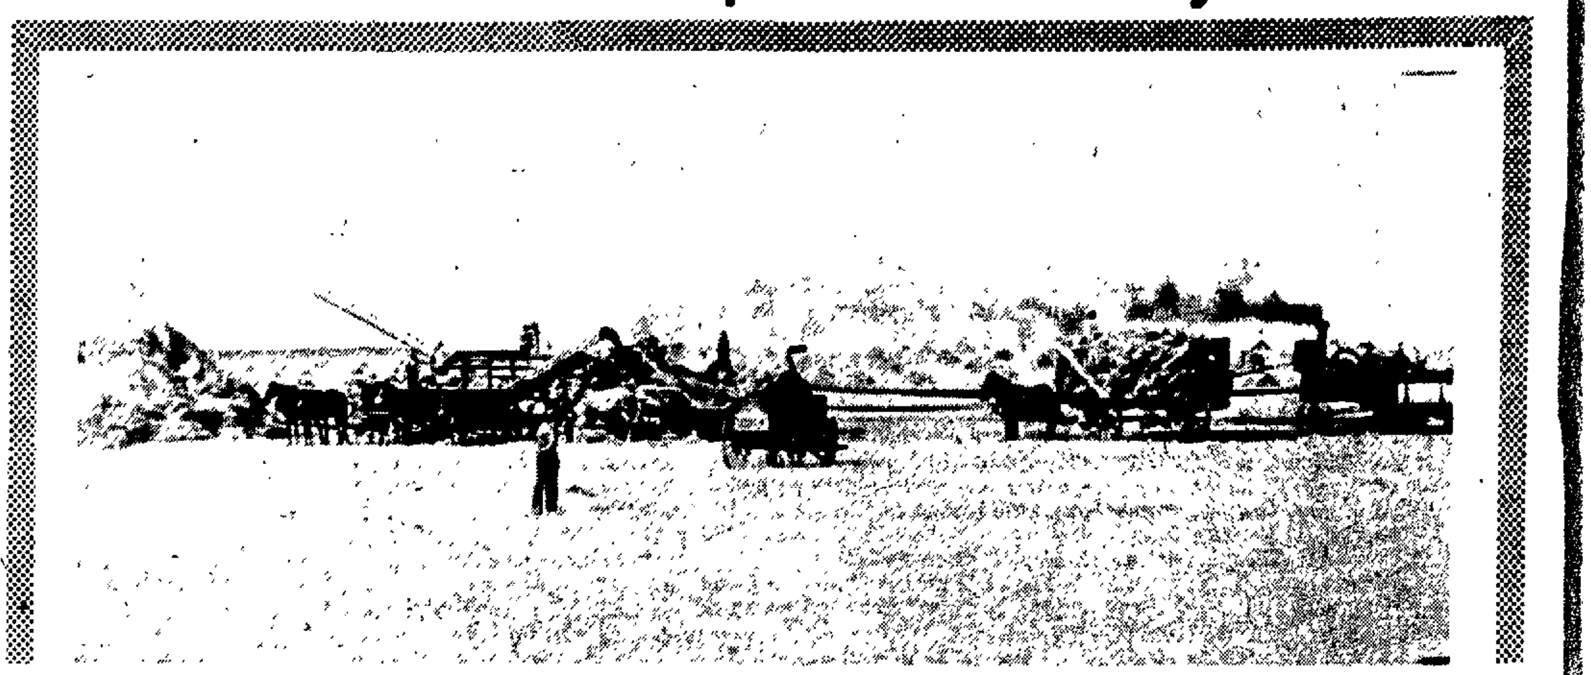
Patchwork prairie country



By LaVerna Hassler
Star Feature Writer

Today I saw our ripening wheat rippling in yellow waves under a drying wind and thought of an era gone for some years now ... the threshing rig era, something left behind that I will never see again.

It was as pretty a picture as I ever hope to see, those wide acres of golden stubble stretching out in a flood around the farm. After the binder had bound the wheat and the sheaves were shocked, they stood like small beehives in a pattern across the field. The arching stems and the heads, bowed with the weight of grain, were left to dry in the wind.

There was always excitement when the threshing rig pulled into the farmyard followed more slowly by racks and teams. One by one the racks went to the field to begin loading the bundles while the separator and engine were set just the right distance so the belt between the two would have the correct tension.

There was the snort of the engine as the fly wheel rushed into motion and a low grumble of machinery. A smoke of dust billowed behind the racks lugged by teams sometimes skitterish by the moving belts and the sharp clack and clang of iron and chains.

With the feel of leather tugging in his palms, the pitcher coaxed his team up to the machine. Rims of the horses' nostrils stiffened as their great muscles rippled and tugged at the leather.

There was the shrilling of the cylinders as the self-feeder moved the dry bundles into the jowls of the threshing machine. A flash of fork tines moved rhythmically as the pitcher removed tier after tier of bundles. The hacking knives began the process as each grain laden bundle moved along the feeder. It took some skill to pitch the bundles just right and at the right pace for the open feeder mouth devoured them swiftly . . . a hungry animal snaring its prey.

The hum of the cylinders growled and trembled while the fan and shaker added to the din.

"Whoa! Whoa!" shouted the teamster as his team took an uneasy step forward. Kernel and chaff were separated and the wheat hissed as it poured through the grain spout into a waiting wagon.

Under a slight puff of breeze, the chaff would lift, drifting over both man and beast. Smudges of dust hung in the air and there was the hot smell of oil and leather.

Between the engine and separator wavered a belt, a wide thread binding the distance together. It too had its own mingled smell of belt dressing and leather. On rare occasions it would slip off and the swelling clash of iron against iron would cease until it could be put back in place.

Nearby, the stack of fresh straw built by the boom of the blower grew higher and higher. The dry straw had an odor of its own, fresh and clean as the stubble from which it came.

Sweat dotted the faces of the threshers and gathered the dust that sifted from the wheel ruts. Lunch time provided the respite to wipe the sweat from the brow and ease the thirst while the team stood nearby now and then kicking at the flies that managed to get between the fly nets.

Pulling into place and guiding his team was another pitcher whose rack was built high and sturdy with golden bundles.

On and on it went throughout the day, shouting, the clang of machinery, the whir of wheels, the wind and the sun. But when evening came and the great engine and separator were stopped, the silence rushed. The pale yellow of a burned-out day thinned to darkness and weary men and beasts were glad for the respite. Dust and chaff hung in the air for awhile but when the quiet slanted down with the shadows, the dust settled and only the smell of fresh straw remained.

Perhaps it was the drying smell of straw and the glint of golden wheat that stirred the days of threshing into reality for me today. Whatever the sources, the song of those harvest days drifted faintly over the fields and was lost but it was good to hear the refrain once more.

Britain's Fleet Street wails in loud lament

James Reston

London — You can't come to Britain these days without wondering why it looks so good and sounds so terrible. In the generation since the last war, the condition of the people has improved beyond most predictions, but still it grumbles as much about the Socialists today as it used to about the Tories.

Part of the reason for the present carping is that it is going through another spate of labor unrest over wages and prices. Also it is approaching another election with a divided minority Labor government and a high rate of unemployment.

More people are out of work here now than at any time since the last world war — 1,350,000 or 3.5% of the work force. But the government's policy of financial restraint is beginning to work and the Callahan government is wheeling and dealing and almost begging for a little more time.

"Compared to a year ago," the Sunday Times business editor said this week, "the situation is markedly better financially, moderately improved industrially. The Treasury has got public spending under control. Interest rates have come down to a much more reasonable rate (from 15% last October to 8% today) and the sterling exchange rate against the dollar has recovered from a low point of $1.55½ in late October to $1.70-72 this week."

During the celebration of Queen Elizabeth's Silver Jubilee, Fleet Street publications have naturally been bombarding the people with statistics on the improvement of the standard of living in the 25 years of her reign. This is small consolation at the present rate of taxes and prices, but the comparisons are interesting nevertheless.

"Comparing our estate with that of 25 years ago," says David Watt, the brilliant commentator of The Financial Times, "one is constantly struck by the prodigious growth of prosperity and range of choice of the people of these islands. This is not simply a matter of crude measures of wealth and wellbeing . . . What is impressive is the surge in the quality of life."

He notes not simply the alleviation of extreme poverty and disease, but the increase in the number of university students from 97,000 in 1952 to 275,000 in 1976, and he makes another valid point about the burst of creativity in the arts over the last generation.

He notes also the decline of privilege, the wider distribution of economic power, the moves towards equality for women, and "the general dismantling of class distinctions, formality, and snobbery."

Even so, the improved statistics, like the appearance of affluence, have not silenced the critics of the British social, economic and political systems. Here, as elsewhere in the Western world, the rising affluence has been accompanied by rising prices and inflation, and the increase of personal freedom, by an increase in crime, and what is surprising here a marked decline in respect for institutional authority.

The prices in the fancy shops of London's Mayfair make New York's Fifth Avenue look like a bargain basement. And the Fleet Street papers are full of laments about the waning respect for the police, for religion, and even, in the face of union monopoly power, for Parliament itself.

An American coming here is constantly impressed by what seems to be the waste of talent in Britain — and the flight of talent and the discouragement of talent. Surely there cannot be another country in the world where so many attractive, intelligent and articulate people are working at jobs below their talents, unused or underused, or just plain discouraged.

Maybe this helps explain why Britain looks so good but sounds so gloomy. The evidence not only of the good life but the elegant life is here for all to see — in the glittering shops, the excitement of Wimbledon and the races on the BBC, the gleaming limousines at the theaters and the big hotels. But one senses the beginning of a change here now. The complexities of modern life have been too much for the Socialists and Tories alike, and the people are clearly tired of the old ideological arguments and are looking for new approaches and probably for new leaders.

Former British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin used to say that "the trouble with the British people is their poverty of desire — they're too easily satisfied." But they're satisfied no longer — with the progress of the last year or the last 25 years, or the arguments of the parties, or the domination of the unions, or the impotence of Parliament.

Accordingly, as David Watt suggests, "The great questions for the next 25 years are really constitutional ones. Is the system capacle of adjusting itself to a whole new set of premises? . . .

"For the first time in a hundred years, there is some hope that we shall see displayed something of the much vaunted British political genius — adaptability, pragmatism, and determination to avoid violent solutions."

Ms. Nice Gal is out — the militant is in

Today's Mail

Lincoln, Neb.

This is to protest the manner in which the Nebraska Women's Meeting was held June 24-26. The purpose of the meeting was to elect delegates to the Houston national meeting in the fall and to vote upon resolutions brought out of the various workshops held concerning some specific problem areas for women.

I deeply resent the fact that a certain well organized, well financed, and highly vociferous faction tried to take over the meeting. Those so-called pro-lifers (a term I also resent because it automatically and untruthfully makes anyone opposing their views "pro-death") tried by both parliamentary maneuvering and massive bus-in of "pro-life" voters to alter the true course of a meeting set up to be representative of all women in Nebraska. Those "lifers" did not attend workshops or contribute to an exchange of ideas, most of them just came in by the busload, stuffed the ballot boxes, and left.

I found it pitiful as well as unbelievable that women were voting against themselves under the domination of men — fathers, husbands, ministers, priests, etc. — on such basic issues as improved Social Security status for themselves, housing, credit, health and other (to me) innocuous issues. Are these women so cowed, so imbued with the "slave" mentality that they vote away their only hope of progress towards equality for themselves? Or are they afraid of the consequences of saying, "No more domination!" to the insatiable male ego? I pity those women, but I detest those men.

They may think they have won the war today, but it was just a skirmish. There are many others like me who went into that meeting as mild-mannered, middle-of-the-road feminists and came out as militants.

Onward, sisters! No more Ms. Nice Gal. We have nothing to lose but our inferior status.

Tax information

Omaha, Neb.

I want to express appreciation on behalf of the Internal Revenue Service to The Lincoln Star for the assistance and co-operation we received this year in providing tax information to Nebraska residents.

As in the recent past, changes in the federal tax law made this contribution to public understanding of those laws a valuable ingredient in another successful income tax filing season. We believe publications such as The Lincoln Star are a major factor in our overall success and particularly in our mission to strengthen our federal tax system.

Felt unwelcome

Lincoln, Neb.

The Star's June 27 article on the IWY conference was incomplete and unfair to those who work for the right to LIFE for all humans, born and unborn. All but one of the quotes were taken from the feminist point of view — that being self-righteousness and concern for self-liberation.

Not once did the article touch upon the so-called "parliamentary procedure" used in the meetings. Inaccurate vote-counting, unfair recognition of those present, and time-killing were some of the tactics used by the presiding women to confuse and intimidate many.

The pro-lifers who came were made to feel unwelcome. Some were threatened with physical violence by lesbians enraged at our mere presence. Since this is a tax-funded operation, I feel the workings of the national and state committees should be exposed. I felt a strong prejudice the whole time.

Let's get back to the right to LIFE, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Today's Pharisees

Lincoln, Neb.

I was at the IWY conference this past weekend along with hundreds of other women who expected two days of simply voicing our needs as human beings and our rights as Americans. However, there were so-called Christians present to denounce these basic needs and rights. These people came by bus and by recommendation of priests and ministers not only to disrupt the efforts of Donna Polk and others to make the conference organized, but to show their support toward continued oppression for Nebraska women.

For two days I listened to these pro-lifers and ERA opponents quote indiscriminate passages from the Bible to "prove" that women have no rights. These actions reminded me of another section of the Bible, when Christ denounced the Pharisees who fought for the letter of the Biblical law instead of the intent of that law. These people are our modern-day Pharisees.

ANOTHER CHRISTIAN WOMAN

Tax and spend

Lincoln, Neb.

What next?

One of the state capitol bureaucrats suggests bus service between Omaha and Lincoln for state employes and that a federal grant would be likely.

I don't think that any kind of tax money — whether city, county, state or federal — should be used for their service. If they want to live in Omaha and work in Lincoln, they should furnish their own transportation. These bureaucrats want to give too much service free to people.

This is like the dummy who wanted the tunnel under the street for the state employes. They like to spend peoples' tax money.

CONCERNED

RR crossings

Lincoln, Neb.

I think it's time to do some grousing about the deplorable condition of the railroad crossings in Lincoln. To mention a few, 56th and Y Streets, 19th and Vine, and the "ever-rough" 35th and Adams. There are many more needing work and I wonder why our elected representatives in city government are not attending to this. If the railroads are responsible for maintenance and repair, then get after them!

As a comparison, I also work in Omaha and find their crossings in excellent shape. For the past couple of years, Omaha has been testing a composition material on tracks at 76th and Dodge and 72nd and Pacific. These crossings have held up very well and Dodge Street carries more traffic than any street in Lincoln.

On another matter, who is responsible for the 40-mph speed limit on 84th Street from O Street south to Highway 2? This is absurdity at its height. It looks as though someone is deliberately designing a speed-trap.

MR. V.

Against our motto

Lincoln, Neb.

It was very interesting to watch democracy in action at the Nebraska International Women's Year meeting last weekend. One "party" has decided that there is only one issue in life: the right to be born. That is, once a person is born, this group is no longer interested in them as persons — American citizens — with rights guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States. Thus, it was astonishing to see Nebraska citizens, members of our so-called educated electorate, vote against reaffirmation of the Nebraska state motto: "EQUALITY UNDER THE LAW."

What then, pray tell, is democracy all about?

Indeed, as is written on the Capitol Building: "The salvation of the state is watchfulness in the citizen."

SALLY STODDARD

Woman finds Tris everywhere

Los Altos, Calif. (AP) — Angela Horine spent Mother's Day this year snipping tiny samples of fabric from her children's nightgowns, wrapping the clippings in copper wire and burning them.

Every time she saw a spurt of green flame, she knew this nightie or that sleeper she'd been putting on her 1½-year-old daughter probably contained the chemical Tris (2,3-dibromopropyl) phosphate, suspected of causing cancer

"It breaks my heart because I remember the baby, how sweet she looked in those pajamas, and now we find out they have Tris in them," she says "They have known it would probably cause cancer for at least two years now If they'd done something then, my baby could have avoided all that exposure "

Mrs Horine and a neighbor, Catherine Clement, have mounted a crusade to inform parents about the dangers of the chemical, banned in April by the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission as a flame retardant . children's clothing

Mrs Horine, 35, has written articles for local newspapers and for newsletters put out by her husband's electronics company and her 14-year-old's junior high school A friend posted the warnings in her pediatrician's examining rooms

Mrs Horine's campaign has enjoyed some modest success She says she convinced one disbelieving executive of a children's clothing company to test all his son's pajamas She has received encouraging letters from government officials, and friends call her to check out new sleepwear purchases for their own children

"People are very misinformed about the dangers of Tris," says Mrs Horine "Some people say, 'Oh, everything causes cancer I'm not going to bother to go through all my kids' pajamas '

"But I think if you're not upset, you really don't know the facts "

How real is the danger? Since cancer experiments cannot be performed on humans, nobody knows for sure But tests by the National Cance Institute showed Tris to be a potent carcinogen in rats and mice, and other experiments have shown that Tris rubbed off from clothing can be readily absorbed into the skin

Dr Bruce Ames, a University of California biochemist whose tests first spotted Tris as a potential carcinogen two years ago, has estimated that 17,000 of every million children who wore Tris-treated pajamas might develop kidney tumors by the time they reach their 20s

Other scientists estimate a lower human risk factor — 300 kidney cancers per million male children by one study, 6,000 per million in another In these studies, the risk factor for young girls was estimated to be about one fifth that for boys

After 1972, when flammability standards went into effect for children's nightwear Tris was used as a flame retardant in all acetate, triacetate and most 100 per cent polyester pajamas up to size 6 In 1975, the standards were extended to cover sizes 7-14

Mrs Horine, who had saved nightgowns from each of her five daughters for passing along to the next, couldn't remember what she'd purchased when

So she and a chemist friend developed a simple test Wrap a tiny snippet of fabric in copper or brass wire and hold it in a steady flame in a well-ventilated room If the flame burned green, Mrs Horine says she knew the fabric contained one of several chemicals, the most likely being Tris

If she saw the green flame, she put the garment aside and wrote to the manufac turer to be sure

When she finished with the sleepwear, she started on the bedding She found Tris in blankets, pillows, comforters and one of her daughter's sleeping bags

"Then I thought I was done and I tucked my 6-year-old in bed that night and thought, 'Here you are in your Tris-free pajamas and your tris-free bed and you re safe ' "

That was before she tested Rosy, the ancient stuffed giraffe she tucked into bed with 6-year-old Jennifer every night The flame burned bright green

So it was back to the torch with all the doll clothes, dolls and stuffed animals accumulated over 14 years by five girls Mrs Horine got a positive test in half the dolls' hair or clothes

Robert Poth, compliance officer for the Consumer Product Safety Commission in Bethesda, Md , says the staff is compiling information on health hazards of Tris used in materials other than children's clothing

The commission recently sent Mrs Horine a list of Tris-treated products not covered by the ban Included were toy sewing kits, home insulation materials, auto upholstery fabric, Christmas decorations and polyester thread used by the garment industry

Mrs Horine and Mrs Clement were not convinced by the commission's recommendation that Tris-treated children's clothing would be safe after it was washed three times

"I got a strong green flame on things I'd washed hundreds of times," Mrs Horine says

Dr Robert Harris of the Environmental Defense Fund in Washington says his group thinks even laundered Tris-treated clothing is dangerous The EDF is suing the Consumer Product Safety Commission in an effort to force a ban on all clothing and fabric treated with the chemical

The EDF also has asked the commission to order cancer tests on other chemicals — some of them chemically similar to Tris — used as flame retardants in children s sleepwear

Mrs Horine threw out all the Tris-treated items she found in her house Mrs Clement went even further She threw out everything that might have been washed with her daughter's Tris-treated gar ments

"I had to wait a long time to have a baby " says Mrs Clement, 36, as she watched her dark-eyed 20-month-old daughter playing in Mrs Horine's yard "I refuse to take any chances "

Youthful painted faces are big fad of summer of '77

Kings Mills, Ohio (UPI) — One of the latest fads in this seemingly carefree-oriented summer of '77 is to have your face painted in bright colors and wild designs and then walk around soaking up double-takes from passersby.

"Why not?" said a youth with crisp, clean lines of washable paint forming jagged red stars around his eyes. "It makes me feel really free for awhile. I have no cares and the rest of the world is just spinning by."

The fad has especially caught hold at places like Kings Island amusement park, where artists are charging from between $1 and $2 25 for facial paint-jobs.

"We just started it this summer and a lot of people want it done," said 18-year old Kelly Dunlap, one of several young artists whose entire summer job will consist of painting faces.

"When I finish, the people stand in front of our mirror and just stare and stare Then they can't wait to go walk around the park I think it makes them feel like a different person.

"They may be a little self-conscious at first, but a lot of them come back later in the day and tell me they really like it. Some want to know if they can go home and sleep with it on and keep it the next day. But it's washable paint, and rubs off on pillows."

Not everybody appreciates the fad.

"I've had some kids do it without telling their parents and they come back and say, 'My mom saw me and she about killed me.' "

But some mothers insist on having their infants painted.

"I like painting the little kids the best, say from ages 3 to 10," said Kelly. "They really get excited. I think a lot of them believe they're clowns."

Some adults also get painted and Kelly said her wildest paint job was requested by a disc jockey from Virginia

"He had me paint a spiral that started from his eyelid and encircled his entire face," she said "He also had me paint his neck and then put my initials on it — like an artist signing a picture."

Joe Rale and Timothy Gault get great double-takes.

LAP directors planning for expected budget cut

In anticipation of the denial of $50,000 to the Lincoln Action Program by the city and county governments, the LAP board of directors has mapped a reorganized agency for the next fiscal year.

The word was received by LAP employes Tuesday in a letter that said 62 employes would be reduced to about 45 and all wages frozen beginning in October if the funds didn't arrive.

"We have no reason to believe the city or county will provide funding," said Jerry Cinani, chairman of the LAP board's planning and program committee.

"In view of that loss, some adjustment had to be made in the budget," he said.

LAP is federally funded primarily, by the Community Service Agency, but other funds have come from the city and county in the past.

"What we did was look at positions, not people," Cinani said.

The adjustment apparently consolidated or knocked out mostly administrative positions, although Cinani wouldn't give particulars until all of the persons involved had been notified.

LAP has applied for and probably will get about $400,000 in federal funds, the exact amount it received for this year.

Only one outreach position will get the ax, employes were told, which will leave about 10 persons who actually pound the sidewalks with LAP programs.

The cuts also will allow LAP to keep its programs at full strength

Former chaplain decries Pvt. Slovik's execution

Washington (AP) — A former Army chaplain testified Wednesday that Pvt. Eddie Slovik was put before a firing squad in 1945 shortly after Gen Dwight Eisenhower decided that a deserter must be shot as an example to troops fleeing from the front lines

Rabbi David M Eichhorn told a Pentagon review board that the Army "combed military prisons to find deserters who had thrown down their arms and fled from the enemy on two or more occasions " Six men were found, he said, but only Slovik was executed.

The review board is considering the appeal of Slovik's widow for about $70,000 plus interest on her husband's National Service Life Insurance policy The widow's attorney, Bernard Edelson, argued that Slovik was killed unjustly

"Eddie Slovik was not guilty of a crime," said Edelson The attorney said Slovik "did not have the capacity to fight "

Gordon M Hobbs, who presided over the hearing, said the panel will make its recommendation to the Army secretary in one or two weeks

Rabbi Eichhorn, a retired lieutenant colonel from Satellite Beach Fla told the board his testimony was not intended to influence their decision But he added "I felt the time perhaps had come to put this information on record "

Under questioning from board members he acknowledged that he personally did not have first-hand information about the planned executions but said he had no reason to doubt the story He said he could not pin down exactly who told him of the developments but said either the 7th Army chaplain or personnel staff told him why execution plans had been drawn up

Rabbi Eichhorn, said each of the six soldiers selected for execution were given "an intense psychiatric examination" and that a number of the soldiers were declared mentally unbalanced

"But one of those who were given psychiatric clearance, the private Slovik, was shot, ' the rabbi said

Edelson argued that Slovik "was no more guilty and his record was no worse than many others who did much worse than he "

Gandhi daughter-in-law: phones tapped

New Delhi (UPI) — Menaka Gandhi, daughter-in-law of ousted Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, charged Wednesday that telephones at her home were tapped and that police kept a vigil on her husband

Menaka, wife of Sanjay Gandhi, controversial son of the former premier, said in a letter to the Time of India the new Janata Party government's contention that private citizen telephones were no longer tapped and surveillance removed "was untrue."

"Charan Singh (the home minister) says that the bugging of phones has stopped and people are not being followed any more. Absolutely untrue," the letter said

"The phones at 12 Willingdon Crescent (a government-alloted house in New Delhi were Mrs. Gandhi stays) are tapped and a lot of our friends have complained that their phones are bugged," Menaka said.

Comprehensive plan draws suits

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

The Lincoln-Lancaster County Comprehensive Regional Plan is barely six months old, but it has already attracted three lawsuits.

Suits No. 2 and 3 have been filed in Lancaster County District Court, while the first suit was ruled against last week. That suit, by Lincoln businessman Newt Copple, had challeneged the validity of the Comprehensive Plan and noted a conflict of interest by City Councilman Steve Cook who voted for the plan.

District Court Judge William Blue upheld the validity of the plan and said officials may proceed with its implementation, in his ruling of June 23.

The most recent suits challenge the Comprehensive Plan and a change of zone ordinance passed by the city council regarding land near 56th and Old Cheney Rd., which developer Hub Hall wants to turn into a shopping center. Copple, who wants to develop his own shopping center at 40th and Old Cheney, filed one suit while Lincoln surgeon Dr. Stephen Carveth and attorney Charles Wright filed the other.

Carveth, who lives at 63rd and Old Cheney, and Wright, of Route 9 (also on Old Cheney), allege the proposed center at 56th and Old Cheney would have a "detrimental Impact" on their properties and will have an "adverse affect upon the Comprehensive Plan and future planning efforts."

The nine-page suit claims that Wright lives within 775 feet of the rezoned tract and Carveth within 410 feet. It further alleges that a shopping center on the tract will "greatly increase the traffic" in the area and will "greatly affect the noise level of the area."

The council voted to approve the zoning change, paving the way for development of the 58-acre tract, on May 9, 1977, after the location had been removed as a point of contention in Copple's original suit (the one ruled on last week). Hall's attorneys had argued that their site shouldn't be included in that action because neither Cook, nor Copple, had any interest in the area. Cook is a partner with businessman John O'Neill in a proposed shopping center at 27th and Pine Lake Rd. The judge agreed and the council action was given the go-ahead.

Copple, who has had a running battle with the city over the Comprehensive Plan, alleges that the rezoning ordinance giving approval for the Hall plan violates the Comprehnsive Plan. He also notes the other suit which he has pending against the plan (Copple still have the option to appeal Blue's decision on that suit).

Both suits ask the court to find the rezoning ordinance void and of no force and effect.

Brothers guilty of beer theft

Two Lincoln brothers were found guilty Wednesday of stealing 279 cases of Coors beer from an interstate truck shipment and selling the brew on the parking lot of the Moose Lodge.

A six-man, six-woman jury in U.S. District Court returned the guilty verdict against Clifford Pulec, 39, and his brother Bob, 32, for the felony charge that carries a fine of up to $5,000 to 10 years in prison.

U.S. District Court Judge Warren K. Urbom said he would sentence the two men on July 21 following an investigation by the federal probation officer.

The beer was part of a shipment of 2,000 cases from an Oklahoma City liquor dealer that stopped in Lincoln last July en route to New Jersey. The Pulecs drove the truck to Lincoln, then left the trailer of beer in Council Bluffs where the trucking firm that they worked for was headquartered.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeffrey Bogue, in his closing remarks to the jury, admitted that the government's case against the Pulecs was circumstantial, since no one saw them take the beer from the truck.

During the trial, however, Bogue produced six witnesses who said they bought a total of 135 cases from the Pulecs last July 19 for $4 a case.

The Pulecs testified they sold about 140 cases of beer on that day, but said it was beer they had bought while driving a truck in neighboring states. They said they only sold about 60 cases for $4, because it had gone bad, and had sold the rest for $6.

Conflicting evidence on how the truck was loaded and how long the brothers were in Oklahoma City also surfaced during the trial.

"Somebody's not telling the truth," Bogue said in his remarks, and noted Bob Pulec had admitted lying to a Federal Bureau of Investigation officer.

Paul Conley, the Pulecs' attorney, said the differences in testimony were the result of "innocent misrecollections" due to the fact that the incident occurred some 11 months ago.

Conley told the jury that the truck may have been 279 cases short when it left Oklahoma City.

How will they haul the coal?

Pittsburgh (AP) — The nation's coal industry will be digging at a furious pace to meet President Carter's energy goals, but some producers wonder if the coal can be moved once it's out of the ground.

They're skeptical about the ability of the transportation industry, particularly railroads, to haul their product.

"They can't handle what we've got. What would happen if we really started cranking out the coal," asked Horace Van Meter, vice president of operations at Jewell Smokeless Coal in Grundy, W.Va.

Of the 665 million tons of bituminous coal mined last year, railroads carried 66 per cent, or about 440 million tons. The rest was moved by barge or truck or used at mine-mouth generating plants.

As part of his plan to reduce reliance on dwindling supplies of oil and natural gas, Carter wants the coal industry to mine more than one billion tons by 1985. The coal industry has doubts that goal can be met and cites environmental concerns as one of the biggest roadblocks. But presuming the one billion ton goal can be met and assuming the railroads keep their same share of the traffic, they'll be hauling about 725 million tons in eight years. Railroad officials greet the prospect of a coal boom with undisguised glee.

Although the industry has high fixed costs, once those costs are met profits can be handsome and coal traffic may well propel the railroads beyond the break-even point.

"The industry is suffering from a Penn Central (bankruptcy) hangover. That's the image," said Dan Lang of the Association of American Railroads (AAR). But he said coal hauling roads are doing well.

Some, such as the Chessie System and the Union Pacific, are money-makers and their roadbed and equipment are in good shape.

But there are also roads like Conrail, the government-created hybrid of six bankrupt Northeastern railroads. Their coffers are empty, their equipment decrepit and their tracks falling apart.

There is also a hopper car shortage, which does little to inspire coal industry confidence in the railroads' ability to meet the energy challenge.

According to Conrail spokesman Tom Hoppin, there is currently an industry-wide shortage of about 4,000 coal cars.

Railroads blame the shortages on peaks and valleys in coal production, saying they can't afford to have cars sitting idle.

But a spokesman for one of the nation's largest coal companies said railroads historically have a poor record of supplying equipment.

"The railroads tell us now that when we increase our production, they can easily increase the car supply because it takes a lot longer to open a mine than it does to build a hopper car. Well, that's the same damn story I've heard for 25 years," he said. To handle the increased coal tonnage, the AAR estimates up to 13,400 hopper cars, which cost about $30,000 each, and 670 locomotives, with a $500,000 price tag, will have to be acquired by 1985. The investment could well range from $4 billion to $6 billion.

The figures sound high, but Lang says they would not be a crushing financial burden. "Rail equipment is a pretty easy thing to borrow money for," he said.

Many railroads are already gearing up for the expected traffic. Chessie, for instance, is planning to acquire 35,000 hopper cars at a cost of $1 billion beginning in 1980. And Conrail, vital to Appalachian coal fields, is in the midst of a $6 billion rehabilitation program.

The potential for a coal-generated boom for the railroads has not been lost on investors.

As of June 10, Wall Street's Value Line ranked western railroads at a sizzling No. 8 out of 90 industries rated. "Western roads are diversified and they have tremendous natural resource holdings along their rights of way," a Value Line spokesman said.

Eastern roads, sensitive to Conrail's difficulties and the volatile coal labor situation in Appalachia, were rated 48th.

Railroads are already facing stiff competition for coal business from builders of coal slurry pipelines, which could move coal — ground to the consistency of sugar and mixed with water — over great distances.

At the moment there is only one slurry system operating in the U.S. — the 273-mile Black Mesa line that has been moving coal for seven years from northern Arizona to a power station in southern Nevada.

But a number of other pipelines are planned, and the most ambitious is a $750 million project by Energy Transportation Systems Inc. (ETSI) that would move 25 million tons of coal a year over 1,036 miles from Wyoming to Arkansas.

Railroads are bitterly opposed to slurry systems, and they have refused to allow proposed pipelines to cross their tracks.

"We think they're unnecessary," said Lang. "They would also skim away the cream of the coal traffic."

Opponents also argue that pipelines would require huge amounts of water in areas that have little water to spare.

But ETSI's Frank Odasz says pipelines would not only be nonpolluting and inconspicuous because they would go underground, they also would be cheaper than railroads because there would be little labor cost.

He says ETSI's pipeline will be able to deliver coal to southern utilities at a 30-year average cost of $7.90 per ton, compared to the railroad's $28.50 per ton.

The coal industry understandably favors pipeline development.

"We simply must be able to move coal better, faster and with greater reliability and economy," said National Coal Association President Carl Bagge. "All modes of transport must be improved and new ones, like coal pipelines, must be introduced and used on a broader scale."

Odasz says simply, "We can't afford to put all our transportation eggs in one basket."

Wyman found rock music out in the open in Poland, but not in Romania.

Music illustrates differences within communist Europe

By Deb Gray
Star Staff Writer

This is a story of two countries, or, rather, one man's perception of two countries, ones that most of us will never see.

Twice this year, Dr. William Wyman, music professor at Nebraska Wesleyan University and director of the NWU choir, has traveled behind the Iron Curtain: first, to Romania with the NWU choir, then, by himself, to Poland; both times, at the invitation of their governments.

Both countries have similiar government structures (both are ruled by Communist parties), but the governments manifest themselves differently.

And, thus, the music and arts created by the two countries are also different, Wyman said . . . except for rock music.

In Poland, rock music was as omnipresent as American as Muzak: in the elevators, on the streets, in lobbies.

In Romania, rock music was a behind-closed-doors thing. Romanian youth asked choir members to come home with them and listen to American disco records.

The Romanian tour, which blended art and diplomacy, was sponsored by the Romanian government (which paid for choir member's expenses once they reached the country) and, in America, by the Friendship Ambassadors.

Friendship Ambassadors, a foundation supported by big money from DeWitt Clinton, the Reader's Digest founder, is dedicated to the theory that the best way to warm understanding between countries, is cultural exchange, rather than ambassadors haggling around a conference table.

Friendship Ambassadors has sponsored primarily popular ensembles — such as jazz bands or swing choirs, Wyman said. The NWU choir sings primarily sacred literature.

The choir was the first ensemble allowed to tour during the winter months, in "the heart of the academic year," and the first to be allowed to perform in Romanian conservatories.

The choir performed in concert halls that seated between 1,000 to 1,500 persons. Those seats were always filled, with another 200 to 300 persons jamming the aisles and hanging over balconies, Wyman said.

The audience applauded after every piece until the choir repeated it, one more time.

And when the concert ended, "we were mobbed," Wyman said. At least a half-hour would pass before the choir could leave the hall, Wyman said.

The lights would be turned out, a signal for everyone to clear out, and audience and performers would be left groping in the dark.

And the Romanians came bearing gifts: flowers, records, art.

The polish visit was a "shot out of the dark." In March, Wyman received an invitation to participate in the Arts Education Conference, held May 5-19 in four Polish cities.

At the conference, Wyman spoke about trends of arts education, citing Nebraska projects that were "of national interest," such as, the bicentennial sculptures and the dialogue of the Arts project sponsored by the Nebraska Arts Council.

Wyman had only superlatives for what he saw in Poland: descriptions you would usually get from a travel agent, words like "terribly exciting," fabulous" and "incredible."

Polish arts instructors, Wyman said thought their methods and their buildings would seem "primitive" by American standards.

"It's true we have better buildings, but we don't begin to do the kinds of things they do with what we have," Wyman said.

Wyman said he saw the best opera of his life. He saw "incredible" mime. Cracow has replaced Vienna as his favorite city. He attended concerts in halls "with the top acoustics of any place I have heard."

Wyman observed classes in the public schools and the "general level of proficiency," compared to what he sees in American schools, is much higher, he said.

Polish schools single out talented children when they are young, Wyman said. Those with talent are given the best training so they can develop those talents, he said.

"There is an entirely different focus to the music," Wyman said, comparing the cultures of the two Communist nations.

The difference between Poland's avant-garde, Western-influenced music, and Romania's "nationalist, folk-oriented" arts can be explained by outside factors, Wyman said — differences in politics and economy.

In Romania, public adulation of President Nicolae Ceausescu reaches deification level, like the love Mao Tse-tung and Ho Chi Minh received in the hearts of their countrymen. People chant his name in the streets. His picture is painted on buildings. Music extols Romanian virtues, Wyman said.

In Poland, "you wouldn't know who the leader was unless you read it in the newspaper," Wyman said.

Western music is allowed into Poland, but in Romania, "access to Western music is very limited," Wyman said. Choir directors would plead with Wyman to give them musical scores.

"They didn't want me to send any music in the mail, because they said it would be too dangerous," Wyman said.

Barber pole defended

Palo Alto, Calif. (UPI) — Barber Will Buchta is standing in the defense of what he thinks is a sacred national tradition — the red-and-white striped barber pole which still rotates outside the entrance of some tonsorial parlors.

"I'm fighting a battle for myself and all other barbers," said Buchta, who expects to be jailed or fined for refusing to obey an eight-year-old ordinance recently called to the attention of barbers in this quiet university city.

The ordinance bans signs with lights and motion.

"It's an American tradition they are destroying," Buchta said. "That pole is an emblem, a tradition."

After receiving a notice from the city building inspector pointing out the illegality of his barber pole, Buchta asked some of his customers what they thought of such a law.

"They're 100% in sympathy with me," the barber said.

About 10 barbers in Palo Alto still had revolving poles when the word was put out that they must conform to the law obviously written to restrict more garish things than the plain old barber pole.

Some of them pulled the plug on their candy-stick poles, but Buchta is holding out and waiting for the law to come and get him.

Meanwhile, he has rallied the local Chamber of Commerce to his side, and the city council has been brought into the issue with the introduction of a new measure to make the traditional turning barber pole legal again.

Town mourns loss of tavern's silver coin bar

Black Diamond, Wash. (AP) — The Morganville Tavern just isn't the same without its inlaid silver dollar bar. Neither is the town.

Tavern owner Rick King discovered the loss when he went to open his roadside watering hole. Gone was the 22-foot countertop with 400 silver dollars imbedded in the wood.

"The silver dollar bar was like a part of the town," said Police Chief Jack Berge. Each coin inlaid in the bar had the name of the person who donated it carved underneath, he said.

King estimated the value of the bar, which dates to 1878, at $8,000.

Berge said it would have taken two persons several hours of work with a crowbar to pry the countertop off its base and a one-ton flatbed truck to take it away.

Black rule policy backed by 46-25%

Harris Poll

By Louis Harris

By 46-25%, the American people endorse the administration's policy of favoring black rule in African countries where the blacks are in a majority This, however, is a sharp drop from the 62-15% majority who held this view a year ago

Basically, by almost four to one, the public feels that South Africa's policy of apartheid cannot be justified By an even more emphatic margin, a majority is also convinced that with black nationalism taking over in Africa, sooner or later, white rule of South Africa is doomed "

Yet a recent Harris Survey of 1 625 adults nationwide indicates that the American people are plainly uncomfortable at the prospect of this country interfering in the internal affairs of South Africa A 76-7% majority holds the view that the U S does not have the right to tell South Africa how it should run its country any more than South Africans have a right to tell us how to run our country ' As a consequence, Americans oppose by 50-21% the U S taking a more active role in opposing the policy of apartheid

Yet they are prepared to exert some pressure, and this can be seen in the depth of support that the public gives to certain positions which Vice President Mondale took when he met with South African Prime Minister Voerster last month

—By 64-11%, a majority believes Mondale ' was right when he said the U S could not morally justify helping South Africa militarily if that country gets involved in war with neighboring black countries "

—By a lesser 42-27%, a plurality also agrees with the vice president s statement that "unless the South Africans change their racial policies, the U S will not help them if they are threatened by Cuban or other Communist military action " Here, people are saying that as much as they object to Communist gains in Africa, they do not think this country should defend a white government in a country with a black majority even if it portrays itself as a bastion of anticommunism The public feels that this stand is justified because it simply lays out as a matter of fact just what the U S will or will not do

Although the public supports the administration's hands-off policy in the event of military action against the South African government, it is equally emphatic about not wanting this country to give active support to black African countries or black groups within South Africa who are trying to oust the present white government

In many ways, the test case of South Africa points up the delicate balance the President must keep as he pursues his policy of calling for human rights everywhere in the world Clearly the American people believe that South Africa's suppression of its black majority cannot be justified, and they will support any statement by their leaders that expresses disapproval of such inequities At the same time, the public is equally convinced that we should not be the leader in organizing the overthrow of governments that might be violating human rights The right of self-determination is still precious to most Americans

The Staffer

By Nancy Hicks

When my children complain that the sidewalk is too hot for bare feet, that it is really a four Popsicle day, that if God had wanted children to wear clothes he wouldn't have made a Nebraska summer . . . it's then I remind them of the Winter of '77.

For that winter was cold — so cold that our heat bill for December topped the Christmas credit card bill. It was so cold that my long underwear shivered — inside the house.

The whole winter, as I recall, was relentlessly frigid. But there was one memorable weekend when the weather, Lady Luck and modern equipment combined to push our household back to the sod hut era.

It was a January Sunday, and despite a sunny sky, the red line of the thermometer was shorter than my temper.

Bundled up, three sweaters each, we drove the windy stretch to church, but not back again. Sometime during the prayers and songs, one worn tire gave out.

We thumbed a ride home, only to discover that our never too aggressive furnace was not keeping pace with the arctic chill. Inside the air was a nippy 54 degrees.

So the sweaters and mittens stayed on as we set about our afternoon activities.

Daughter Five — an iceberg herself — immune to the below zero air, put on her coat and went out to find a playmate. Instead she discovered a fact of nature — warm tongues and ice cold metal railings do not mix.

Scared and bloody, but much wiser, she retired under a sleeping bag for a nap.

Mama then sat down at the family typewriter for a few hours of silent correspondence. During the first letter to a host of families whose last names all begin with H, that very key of the typewriter flew off the stem and disappeared in the carpet.

Frustrated and frigid, Mama crept under another sleeping bag, cursing the inconveniences of modern life; meanwhile the animals of the house curled atop every hot air duct.

Papa's afternoon project was the repair of a long broken light switch. But Papa is more at home in the chlorinator room of a swimming pool than in the wiring business. While the switch appeared all fixed, downstairs in the basement the switch box quietly hummed.

And at 9:10 p.m. the smell of electrical smoke drifted through the house. There was no fire, only a very hot switch box. Within a few seconds every switch in the house quit operation. Any light that was on at 9:10 was on forever; any light that was off, was permanently off.

We bathed in blackness and snacked by candlelight. And still leery of the electrical fire smell, I gathered up everything precious — two small children, all picture albums, one box of very old love letters — and set up a bedroom on the living room floor next to the front door.

The next morning a professional electrician returned our light switches to normal and discovered the source of our heating problem. Family cat prancing through the air ducts had blocked off most of them. We were sending as much hot air to the garage as we were to the house.

For the price of one winter house call we returned to the light and heat of the 20th century.

The typewriter is still at the repair shop waiting for an H.

Which should have priority, Rose Bowl or a new baby?

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am expecting a baby, and Jan. 1 is my due date. When I told my husband, he said, "Gee, that's tough because I've already ordered tickets for the Rose Bowl game." (He and three of his buddies always go to the game.)

I told him he shouldn't plan on going next year, but he says he'll make plans to go, and if I'm not in labor when it's time for him to leave for the game, he'll go. If I am, he'll cancel his plans and sell his ticket.

Abby, when I had our first baby, my water broke and the baby was born within a few hours.

I want my husband with me through everything. Don't you think being with me should be more important to him that a football game?

My mother lives nearby and she could take me to the hospital, but I still want my husband there. What to you think?

MARRIED TO A FINK

DEAR MARRIED: The Rose Bowl game is an annual event. Having a baby (I presume) is not. Also, the game will be televised, so he could "see" it and be with you, too.

I say the birth of the baby takes precedence over the Rose Bowl game. And if your husband complains, kick him in the end zone.

DEAR ABBY: This is not a question, but a piece of information that could save many lives.

NEVER go to sleep with the TV turned on. (And caution children who have TV's in their rooms to be sure the set is turned off before they go to sleep.)

The other evening my son was watching TV in his bedroom when the smoke began to pour from the set. He quickly turned it off and came to our room. But the time we got back to his room with the fire extinguisher, flames were shooting out of the bottom of the set and noxious fumes from burning insulation and plastic began to fill the room.

We put out the fire with the fire extinguisher, but it took a long time (even with the windows open) to clear the air of the fumes.

If our son, who is a very sound sleeper, had been asleep when this occurred, he probably would have died of smoke inhalation before we became aware of the problem. The set was not old or worn. We later learned it had defective wiring.

This may not be a very common occurrence, but if it happened to us, it could happen to others, and on the chance that it could save just one life I think it deserves space in your widely read column.

ROSEMARY S., PLACITAS, N.M.

DEAR ROSEMARY: I agree. Thanks for your concern.

For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send $1 to Abigail Van Buren, 132 Lasky Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. Please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (24c) envelope.

Japan cornering calculator market

Washington (AP) — The Commerce Department said that American calculator manufacturers are losing their hold on the U.S. market in the face of growing competition from Japan.

It said the major factor in the change has been "the improvement in Japanese calculator semiconductor technology."

Stress to be fought at NU's Med Center

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

A killer stalks modern man from out of his primitive past.

This killer is not a saber-toothed tiger or a venomous reptile. It doesn't crawl out of the ground, fly through the air or leap from the trees.

Man can't run away from it because he carries it with him, inside of him. It's the body itself, which hasn't changed very much in hundreds of thousands of years even though man has gone from stone axes and animal skins to nuclear missiles and polyester suits.

This killer is commonly referred to as stress, which causes high blood pressure and heart disease. It can also cause emotional illness, alcoholism and drug abuse.

Through a biological survival mechanism, man reacts to any confrontation with a faster heart beat, increased blood pressure and hormone levels, tensed muscles and signals from nerves.

In other times, man used such stimuli to fight or run, depending on the situation. But modern man has more confrontations of a different kind brought to him through expanding technology. And he has less opportunity for physical release of the stress.

So stress can become a killer.

And that's where the International Stress Foundation would like to intervene. A recently formed, nonprofit organization, ISF plans to integrate medical, psychological and sociological research and testing to combat stress, according to Wynn Sanderson, executive director. ISF will establish a stress center at the University of Nebraska Medical Center, Sanderson said. That clinic will test people who are in high stress situations, such as managerial and professional positions. It will also test those who show signs of stress-related diseases.

One use of such a center may be evaluating corporate personnel who are being considered for new jobs to see if their health matches the rigors of the job, Sanderson explained.

After medical examinations and psychological tests, people who show up as potential stress victims will be given instructions on how better to cope with stress.

"We've got to come up with a program that's better than 'You have to lose weight and quit smoking,' " Sanderson said. Counseling may include exercise programs, nutritional evaluation, changing lifestyles and treating such problems as alcoholism and drug abuse.

ISF plans to act as a link between the highly technical findings of research around the country, and the ordinary person who needs to know how to cope with the stress in his life, Sanderson explained.

All data on an individual patient will have to be fed into a computer and given to the physicians and counselors who will suggest changes tailored to the individual.

The organization will also funnel funds to research, both in this country and abroad, on stress-related problems.

Sanderson said the organization chose Nebraska because UNMC's cardio-vascular center has received continued support from the Legislature. The man who heads that center, Dr. Robert Elliot, is one of the top experts on stress and is also chairman of the ISF board.

"We hope to be as well known as the Mayo Clinic within the next three years," Sanderson said. In order to make the clinic and the research a reality, ISF has set a goal of raising $4 million in contributions across the country in the next year.

Boys must wear gym suits too

Amherst, Ohio (AP) — A mother who decided to make an issue of a school rule requiring her daughter to wear a uniform in gym class has won. Now the boys have to wear uniforms.

Mrs. Tom Lockhart was upset because girls at the local junior high school had to buy an $8 gym suit that wasn't required of boys. She thought her daughter should be able to wear shorts and a T-shirt to gym class — just like the boys did.

She also protested the procedure by which her daughter could be excused from taking a shower during her menstrual period. That required that a girl should "M" after the calling of her name while the teacher was taking roll.

The American Civil Liberties Union — which she asked for assistance — called the gym suit requirement a violation of a federal law banning sex discrimination in public schools. The shower question was termed an invasion of privacy by Oberlin ACLU chairman Harvey Gittler.

"We (the ACLU) said it was no one's business whether or not a young woman was having her period — especially a sensitive 12- or 13-year-old," Gittler said.

Since the ACLU complained that the girls' gym suit requirement was discriminatory, boys now are required to buy a standard uniform as well.

Marcella Ridenour, a spokesman for the Board of Education in the Amherst district, said the board sympathized with the request to change the shower procedure and now requires a note instead.

She said the school has a modified dress code and requires girls to wear uniforms for health reasons.

"We are afraid the girls would be found all day long in the same outfits they wore for gym class," Mrs. Ridenour said.

And of Mrs. Lockhart, she added: "The same parent who brought in the ACLU complains about everything."

Mrs. Lockhart declined comment.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♥	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	6 ♠

The most difficult play in bridge — and it doesn't matter how good or bad a player one is — is the opening lead. It is often true that more contracts are lost as a result of the wrong opening lead than on all the ensuing plays combined.

It is impossible to formulate a blanket rule for opening leads. The leader has only his 13 cards and the bidding to go on — and these vary so much from one deal to the next that sometimes one must simply take a stab at the best lead.

However, the leader can occasionally make a good educated guess in hands where his lead is not entirely automatic. Rule number one is to try to beat the contract. Most of the thinking about opening leads stems from this one rule.

Examine West's problem in this deal. He has a right to assume on the bidding that South has the king of spades and that he will therefore score his A-Q and defeat the slam. However, West should not bet his life on this probability.

If he makes the "safe" lead of the jack of clubs, he will wind up taking second money if declarer plays his trumps properly.

West's best opening lead is the ace of trumps! This does not affect the outcome if it turns out that South has the king, but at the same time it increases the chance of defeating the contract if dummy has it.

In the actual deal, when dummy shows up with the king, West continues with a low trump. Declarer can now make the slam by gauging the opening lead correctly and taking a finesse. But in practice, he is more likely to conclude that West led from the A-5 than the A-Q-5, and if he goes up with dummy's king he goes down.

Islands have splendid tropical weather, no industry

Postcard

By

Arorangi — John said: "When the missionary first arrived — in the old days in the Cook Islands — he told the king of Rarotonga about God. The king pointed to the island god of stone.

"He said: 'There is my god. Where is yours?'

"The missionary pointed to the sky: 'Up there.'

"So the king peeked and peeked but he saw nothing."

John said: "That is why they call this village Arorangi. It means, 'peek in the sky'."

☆ ☆ ☆

John is my driver. Rarotonga is only 20 miles around. He doesn't have to do much driving.

There's no industry on the 15 islands of the Cook group. "We ship bananas and pineapple to New Zealand. Some pearl shell. But we have no boats to fish out beyond the reef."

Rarotonga does have splendid tropical weather. The blue South Pacific water is usually 72 degrees. The morning air is 72 today — it's winter down here. The maid complained:

"Very cold day."

The new agreement of nations to extend fishing rights 200 miles from shore could change the Cooks.

Sir Albert Henry, premier since independence in 1965, said:

"Now our waters are being swept by Korean boats. They take the tuna catch back to Pago Pago (American Samoa) to be canned by Starkist."

"If they have to fish 200 miles from our shores, then it would be better for them to move their canneries here."

Pay here is $20 a week — (a few managers get $25) — and there's a 10% income tax.

Except for what they raise and fish, the islands must import from New Zealand.

The canned food selection in the largest store is less than you'd find in a neighborhood papa-mama store in the States.

But a new tourist hotel has been built — 103 rooms. Air New Zealand began a route from the U.S. Six hours direct from Honolulu.

A travel agent said: "I don't think most tourists will take more than three days here. But I think I could set up a triangle tour: Tahiti, Rarotonga, Fiji, Honolulu."

☆ ☆ ☆

"The fishing would help," said Sir Albert while Lady Henry — (he refers to her as "Mama") — served us homemade gingerbread.

There's a catch. "In the middle of the 1880s, all the big powers were looking for guano islands." (Where seabirds have dropped digested fish for a million years. The best fertilizer in the world.)

"The French got some. The Germans and British had warships down here. Finally they all made a treaty. Part of it gave America the right to buy a half dozen of our islands. Any time. Forever."

If the U.S. did this now, it would secure the tuna fishing waters. Sir Albert thinks they won't.

☆ ☆ ☆

Meantime, he hopes travelers' checks will flow down from American banks. Buying white sand beach and warm blue water.

To rent bicycles. Buy cans of New Zealand beer (30 cents). Scotch whisky (60 cents). And rooms at the Rarotongan ($28 a day double).

It's probably the lowest priced island in the South Seas.

Rarontonga was discovered by the mutineers of HMS Bounty after they pushed Captain Bligh over the side. They didn't stop. Kept right on going to Tahiti.

Reader likes listening to all-night talk show

By Joanne Farris

Life Begins At Forty

DEAR JOANNE FARRIS: Your recent mention of Herb Jepko's all-night radio program reminded me to tell your readers about the good all-night talk show that we get on our Mutual radio station.

John Nebel is his name. He pioneered radio talk shows in New York 15 years ago, and now he's on from midnight to 5:30 a.m., originating in New York. He takes phone calls from all over the nation, too, and anyone who is wakeful in those hours can give him a listen, and a call, too.

I drive at night, and I like to listen to John because he is fun and I learn a lot. Signed: L. T., Harrisburg, Pa.

ANSWER: Thanks for the good information for all the night-owls who read this column!

DEAR JOANNE FARRIS: My mother is 88. She lives nearby with my sister and her husband. I am 64, a widow for five years, and I live alone.

Mother is losing her memory, and I get scared when I see how disconcerted she gets when she realizes what she's forgotten. I almost cry when she asks my sister and me where her "little girls are," or "when she's going home," and she never remembers what she has eaten when she eats alone. It seems to me that she just does not care what she eats, though she has a good appetite.

One way we've been having fun is to make a mini-party out of every get-together. Even if it's just a snack or coffee, tea, or a soda, Mother loves the party part.

As I watch her I am developing habits to help me to not forget. I have a special place for my keys, and I always put them there as soon as I walk into my apartment. I have one scratch pad on which I "message" myself, reminding me of calls to make, letters to write, bills to pay, etc. One drawer in my desk is the stamp drawer.

I'm writing because I think other readers may be pleasantly surprised, as I was, at how much tension I have taken out of my life by these simple habits I've cultivated. They're just automatic, now; I don't have to think about them.

One more habit I like is putting an item on my grocery list the minute I open the last package or can or bottle of it. That way I don't have to shop often and almost never have an "emergency" when I just "have to" go to the store right away. Signed R. M., Lakeland, Fla.

ANSWER: How wise you are to develop habits that ease tension. All of us, I guess, have little ways we help ourselves. I'm grateful that you've shared yours with us.

I don't want to let June pass without reminding readers to take precautions to avoid insect stings. Eight persons out of every 1,000 are allergic to stings, and four are severely sensitive to them. More epople die each year from stings than from snake bites.

Avoid stings by not going barefoot. Don't wear bright colors; they attract bees. Wear long sleeves and long pants in the garden or on a hike. Don't strike out at a bee or wasp that comes buzzing. Retreat slowly or stand still. It's important to stay calm.

If you do get stung and you're allergic, get to a doctor or hospital fast. You'll need an immediate injection of epinephrine.

What happens if they eliminate pennies?

It's Your Money

By Jane Bryant Quinn

New York — The U.S. government is proving the adage: penny-wise, pound-foolish. It's thinking about abolishing the one-cent coin, to save the Treasury the cost of making it — but at enormous potential cost to the rest of us.

The Treasury's case is this: Demand for pennies is growing rapidly. Unless something is done, a new mint will have to be built in Denver at a cost of $65 million. If pennies were abolished — replaced, perhaps by two-cents coins — we would not only save the cost of the new mint but also millions of dollars in metals, personnel, shipping and storage.

But what happens to consumer prices if pennies are eliminated? It may be true that nothing costs a penny anymore, but this has no bearing on the importance of pennies in commerce.

Millions of items carry price tags that end in one, three, five, seven or nine cents. If only two-cent pieces existed, the majority of those prices would probably be increased a penny.

It's possible that half the prices might be rounded down a penny, so as to give the merchants the same profit margin they had before the change in coinage. But the temptation to "round up" by just a silly penny would probably be irresistible.

Anti-penny people argue that prices may not, in fact, change. Grocery stores might, for example, continue to use odd prices, then add a penny to the final bill if the total didn't come to an even number. But it seems more likely that all items would soon carry price tags ending in two, four, six or eight cents.

If every man, woman and child in the United States paid only 10 cents more a week because of prices being rounded up a penny, the annual cost would come to $1.1 billion — enough to build 17 Denver mints.

And that's not all. Future price increases doubtlessly would be made at least two cents at a time, rather than going up only a penny. Some prices might come down, of course. The merchant who wants to advertise dresses under $20 will have to use $19.98 instead of $19.99. But that's small potatoes compared with the overall potential for increases.

Other coins have been successfully abolished in our history. Half-cent, two-cent and three-cent coins were struck at various times in the 19th century. But when they were abandoned, they had already fallen into disuse.

The penny, by contrast, is America's most popular coin. Millions of people save pennies in piggybanks, glass jars, and coin collections. All told, some 31% of the coins minted have been taken out of circulation by savers. Another 10% are lost or abandoned. But the remainder continue to circulate.

Some 11 billion pennies were minted last year. At present rates of demand, 12 billion to 15 billion will be needed by 1980, and 25 billion by 1990. The vast majority of all the coins in circulation are pennies.

Abolishing pennies isn't the only way out of the Treasury's cost dilemma. The government could switch to aluminum cents, because more of them can be made on the same equipment.

The last time this idea came up, it was roundly defeated by lobbyists for the vending machine industry. But their claim to consideration should surely take second place to that of consumers at large.

Another course is to mint some two-cent coins along with pennies, and make proportionately fewer pennies. Then, no price changes would be needed.

No good estimates have yet been made as to how much it would cost consumers if pennies were abolished. This important question will be examined next year by the House Subcommittee on Coinage, headed by Walter Fauntroy (D-D.C.), who is worried about the inflationary aspect. There's also a political angle. How, after all, will Americans react if Congress makes them give up their most beloved coin?

Young man sleeps in courthouse

Allegan, Mich. (UPI) — Jason Alan Watts sleeps most of the day behind a desk in the Allegan County courthouse.

No one seems to mind, though, since he's not on the public payroll. And if he awakes, his mother, Register of Deeds Joyce Watts, is nearby.

"He's happier here than he is at home," Mrs. Watts said of her 3-month-old son. She brings him to the office every day.

"With the typewriters and cash registers and people coming in and out, he sleeps more soundly than at home, unless there is a war movie on TV," she said.

Mrs. Watts, a former teacher and dental assistant in this community near Lake Michigan, was elected to the office last November. She didn't know it, but she was pregnant at the time, and on March 21, she gave birth two months prematurely.

"Because he was premature, the doctors encouraged me to breast feed so he would have a better chance against lung infections and could build up immunities," she said.

"The only way I could accomplish that and keep my position was to bring him to the office. So far it has worked out pretty well."

She said her husband, an attorney, also enjoys the arrangement.

"He usually stops in at noon and the three of us have lunch together in my office. It's great, because if the baby gets fussy, Papa can jump in."

The baby sleeps most of the day in a portable crib in a private office off the main work room. "If he has trouble getting to sleep, typing helps. Or I take him into the vault room and talk to him. The people in the office wish he'd cry more so they can hold him."

While she says many mothers have jobs that would not permit them to bring their children along, she thinks it's a great idea and strongly recommends it.

"If and when he becomes more demanding and it begins infringing on the job, I'll put him in a daycare center or hire a babysitter," she said.

"But for now, I know he's getting the best care possible. And I'd hate to miss seeing him during his happy times. His first smile was during office hours."

Mother, flag, apple pie is cause for celebration

Brownwood, Tex. (AP) — When folks here decided to get back to "basic beliefs," they handed out flags, called in Anita Bryant and launched Brownwood's first annual Freedom Week, devoted strictly to "brotherhood, motherhood and apple pie."

"I started studying these rock festivals," said funeral home owner Groner Pitts. "I may not agree with what goes on there but, by golly, they are well organized. I said we ought to do something like that."

Pitts' idea took hold, and before long a 400-member committee was formed in Brownwood, a town of 18,000 persons about halfway between San Angelo and Waco in the heart of Texas.

"We figured it was time that a little town in Texas went back to the basic beliefs," said Pitts. "It may sound corny, by golly, but I'm going to be honest. This week is for motherhood, brotherhood and apple pie," Pitts said. "this is the greatest country in the world. I don't know anyone trying to get out, but I know there's a lot of people trying to get in."

To kick things off, Brownwood's Little Leaguers distributed American flags to residents during the past week. The festivities will continue through Sunday night, winding up with Miss Bryant's appearance.

Work has started on a 10-foot hole to hold a giant skyrocket called the brocade crown chrysanthemum, which was made by a Fort Worth firm for Friday night's fireworks show.

"It's the biggest fireworks shell that's going to be shot this year," said Pitts. "It's 260 pounds and it goes up 2,000 feet before going off. We have to drill a hole in the ground 10 feet deep to get the dadgum thing in."

Pitts said it didn't take long to choose Miss Bryant as headline performer. Businessmen and other citizens donated funds to meet her $7,500 fee

N.Y. alters pot criminal penalties

Albany, N.Y. (UPI) — Gov. Hugh Carey's promised signature is the only thing needed now to make New york the ninth state to decriminalize possession of marijuana

Final legislative approval of a bill to remove criminal sanctions of possession of marijuana came early Wednesday in the Senate by a vote of 32-28, only one more than the number needed for passage.

The measure, which won assembly approval Monday by only three votes, would make possession of ⅞ of an ounce or less of marijuana a violation similar to a speeding ticket, with penalties of up to $100. Sponsors said ⅞ of an ounce would make about 30-40 "joints of pot"

The gift or sale of up to two grams, estimated to be one cigarette, would be a misdemeanor — giving the suspect a criminal record — with penalties of up to three months in jail or a $1,000 fine. Possession or sale of larger quantities would carry greater penalties, up to 15 years in jail for holding more than 10 pounds.

Pre-dawn fire devastates Oskaloosa, Iowa, city block

Oskaloosa, Iowa (UPI) — Damage was estimated at more than $1 million Wednesday following a pre-dawn fire which devastated a city block just west of downtown and destroyed a lumberyard a house an apartment building and another building

Six residents of the two houses escaped the flames authorities said and no injuries were reported

Fire officials blamed the dry weather and lumberyard stock for the rapid spread of the blaze which began in the Hawkeye Lumber Co about 5 a m No cause was immediately known for the fire

"We had four rooms of asphalt products for roofing and we carry a lot of plywood that has glue that will burn quickly We had a whole carload of that sitting in the alley," said Claude Branttner, lumberyard auditor

"It s completely gone," he said, "The loss, I would say, is well over $1 million "

The building also contained cases of highly combustible products such as paint and varnish

Lawn and garden tips Local conservationists write columns in the Sunday Journal and Star They tell you when to plant how to care for your lawn and garden plants

$25 a day spent abroad

Washington (UPI) — The average American who traveled out of the country last year — almost 7 million people — spent 24 days abroad and $25 a day, the Commerce Department said

Those 7 million who chose the nation's bicentennial year for foreign travel were partially offset by millions of tourists from abroad, particularly Western Europe and Japan, who visited the United States

The number of overseas visitors climbed by 20% last year to 4 5 million persons, according to a department study, while the 6 9 million Americans traveling abroad represented an 8% increase over 1975

The study said Americans spent $2 7 billion more overseas than foreign tourists spent in this country last year The number of European visitors increased by 26% last year to 1 9 million They spent $900 million, 40% more than the year before

Chagall still paints; to turn 90

Nice, France (AP) — Marc Chagall, who says, "If you don't work, you start to die," turns 90 on July 7 still hard at work expanding an artistic legacy of amazing variety

To mark the event, some of the world's greatest musicians will perform a public concert in honor of the painter, one of the 20th century masters, and an expanded collection will be inaugurated at the Marc Chagall Biblical Message Museum

The concert in this southern French city was the inspiration of cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, like Chagall a Russian exile

Rostropovich and his wife, soprano Galina Vishnevskaya, will be joined by violinist Isaac Stern and flutist Jean Pierre Rampal in performing with the National Orchestra for a black-tie audience

The artist who resides and works in nearby St Paul de Vence, will be accompanied at the concert by his wife, Vava, his daughter, Ida, and three grandchildren

"He works with music on at all times, so I can see no nicer way to say 'Happy Birthday' than to play music for him," Stern said in Jerusalem

At the museum, a major tourist attraction here, 26 new oil paintings on Biblical themes will be added to the present collection of 17 oils and 39 gouaches Chagall has devoted more than 40 years to Biblical themes and two of the big new works — produced in the past 10 years — depict the Prodigal Son and Job

Ten years ago, as if to forecast that he was moving into a major creative period of his life, Chagall banned all fanfare and public recognition of his 80th birthday

Since then he has designed

—Three monumental tapestries, "The Creation" 'The Exodus and 'The Entry into Jerusalem," for the Israeli parliament house

—A 70-foot-long pastel mosaic for the First National Bank plaza in Chicago

—Three stained-glass windows for the 12th century cathedral at Rheims, where Joan of Arc crowned Charles VII as king of France The three windows marked the end of 50 years of restoration after damage during World War I

—A series of lithographs for a limited edition of Shakespeare s "Tempest"

—Illustrations for a book by the French poet Louis Aragon and a book by Andre Malraux on the Spanish civil war, and a stained-glass window for a church in Saarburg, West Germany

"You have to work while you re alive, because if you don't work you start to die," he said during an appearance at the museum during the past year

Many of Chagall s works, gracing public buildings throughout the world, are brightly colored, deceptively primitive depictions of dreamlike scenes, often showing young lovers or farm animals floating through air

He especially favors the lover motif "I seek out quality like a bride seeks love," he told a recent interviewer "Quality and love are the same thing and I am very strong for love."

Classics back on their backs for school days

New York (UPI) — A strong classic trend dominates back-to-school fashions Plaid kilts, bulky nordic and heathery colors in sweaters, argyle vests, fringed challis shawls and plastic ponchos that fold into tiny pouches

This was the message from Seventeen magazine s 25th annual fall trends fashion show that opened recently in New York City It will be performed in nine other cities in August

Legwarmers eyelet petticoats short rubber boots and knit mittens linked by long strings were also featured

Look for letter sweaters, jumpers knickers, big plaid shirts and camisole blouses, too

For outerwear, there are blossom shaped jackets and sherpa lined three-quarter length coats

Following the trend for women, evening clothes include lots of full tiered skirts, flounces, lace and ruffles

Wade stuns Evert to earn finals spot

Wimbledon (UPI) — Britain's Virginia Wade, conquering her center court nerves for the first time in 16 years, hustled Chris Evert out of her normal game Wednesday to defeat the top seed and reigning champion, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1, and reach the women's singles final of the $373,440 Wimbledon Championships.

Betty Stove upset hometown hopes of an all-British final in the tournament's 100th year by beating Sue Barker, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4, to become the first Dutch player to reach a singles final here.

The final will be played Friday in front of Queen Elizabeth, who dislikes tennis but has agreed to mark the occasion by her presence anyway.

The two semifinals represented the crests and troughs of women's tennis. Wade and Evert played an enthralling match which lasted just under two hours and which the British player, 32 next month, won by attacking at every opportunity

Her first service — the hardest in the women's game — clicked three times out of four and she followed it up with a display of all-court aggression which broke up Evert's rhythmic baseline style.

The world No. 1 fluffed an unusually high number of forehands and afterwards said she was not aggressive enough either mentally or physically.

"I was on the defensive the whole time and I couldn't reach deep down inside of me and pull out what I needed to win. I just didn't have it," she said.

Stove's match with Barker was a flat and tedious 90-minute affair littered with unforced errors with the 32-year-old Dutch player winning only because her opponent made more than she did — which was a lot.

Wade first entered Wimbledon in 1961 but on each occasion, and especially on her two previous semifinal appearances, her nerves have let her down.

This year she promised it would be different, and it was.

"There is always this balance of determination and tension at Wimbledon but as long as you are determined enough there is no problem," said Wade.

She raced to 3-0 in the first set, which was not exceptional because Evert is always a slow starter, but when the St. Lauderdale player doublefaulted on game point to trail 0-4; the crowd sensed the beginning of an upset.

She was too far behind to save the set which Wade won on service, but after an exchange of service breaks in the second set Evert went ahead 4-3 on the Briton's serve and held on to the advantage to win it.

Wade held her service in the opening game of the final set but only because of some fine sportsmanship by Evert, who persuaded the umpire to call a double bounce against herself when he had thought it was all right.

Wade followed this up with one of the best games of the match. She pounced on one of Evert's few miscalculated drop shots to hit a winner and then at 15-40 Evert went long with a backhand.

The match was over and Evert, as she said later, couldn't find anything to dig herself out of trouble.

The Queen's view of tennis was reinforced by Stove and Barker in the following semifinal.

Barker paid the penalty for a weak first service and would have been beaten in two sets if it hadn't been for Stove serving 10 double faults herself.

The final set saw Stove leading 4-2 but he blonde Briton had four break points to come back on Stove's service in the next game and missed all of them.

Stove, women's doubles champion here five years ago, didn't seem to be hampered by her bandaged right knee as much as by her right elbow, which twice got in the way of what should have been easy match winning volleys. Eventually it was forehand error by Barker which won Stove the match — a suitable relfaction on a disappointing semifinal

Wade said Stove would be a difficult opponent because "she's so erratic." Stove said Wade would be tough because "she's so confident"

Wade said she would not feel more nervous Friday just because the Queen would be watching.

"The Queen doesn't care too much for tennis but maybe we can show her that she should," Wade said with a parting smile

Snake unusual hazard for Lincoln gals

By Virgil Parker
Sports Editor

Everyone is aware of the normal hazards on a golf course — out of bounds, lateral water and sand traps.

But one threesome in the Lincoln City Women's Golf Championships at Pioneers Golf Course encountered a new hazard Wednesday morning — a three-foot snake on the 13th green.

Betty Abel reached for a rule book. "I wanted to know what to do if it swallowed by ball," she said with a laugh

"The snake was just lying out there enjoying a sun bath," Willis Jones observed. "We threw things at it, but we had to wait about five minutes for it to slither away so we could putt."

"It was a riot," Jane Deeter agreed.

Deeter, who was tied with defending champion Jean Hyland after Tuesday's opening round at Hillcrest Country Club, didn't get as big a chuckle out of her second 18-hole effort. however.

"I was horrible, especially on the front nine," Deeter said. "I used 21 putts on the front. That tells my story."

Deeter's balky putter resulted in an 85 as she fell seven strokes off the pace set by Hyland, who recorded a sparkling four-over-par 78 to take a commanding lead.

Hyland, winner of the city crown six of the last seven years, will try to wrap up her 15th overall title during Thursday's final round at the Lincoln Country Club.

"I sank a real long putt for a birdie on No. 14," Hyland reported of her Wednesday round, "and then birdied the next hole.

"But, I didn't play the front side too well," she confessed. "I thought I'd finally got it going on the ninth hole when I put together two long shots. I was right on the fringe of the green, but then took four more shots to get the ball in the hole. That, however, was my only double-bogey of the day."

Nine-time champion Dorothy Schwartzkopf held on to her third place spot in the standings, but after an 86 is now 12 shots back.

The contestants were placed in flights according to their first-day scores. The second-best round Wednesday was posted by Sue Hergert. Her 82 and 176 total would be good enough for fifth-place in the championship chase Instead, after an opening 94 at Hillcrest, she has a nine-shot lead in the first flight.

Earline Hogg, 100-93—193, heads the second flight after two rounds, while Kay Fox, 106-96—202, is the third flight leader. Edna Gates, 109-95—204, tops the fourth flight. while Jean Marshall, 116-101—217, is the fifth flight pacesetter.

The junior girls tourney — they play nine holes each day — is tied after two days. Suzie Caesar, 49-52, and Kim Davis, 54-47, are deadlocked at 101, with Cindy George, 51-51—102, right behind.

Fidrych flies to 6th in row

Detroit (UPI) — Mark Fidrych won his sixth straight game with a nine-hitter Wednesday night, helping the Detroit Tigers score a 7-2 victory over Boston for the Red Sox sixth straight loss

Detroit's largest crowd of the season, 51,745, saw Detroit score two runs in the second and third innings off loser Bill Lee and then watched Fidrych run his record to 6-2 since returning from knee surgery.

"The Bird" gave up his first home run in 67 innings when Butch Hobson hit his 13th with one out in the seventh Denny Doyle walked and scored on singles by Rick Burleson and Fred Lynn before Fidrych choked off the rally

Jason Thompson doubled after rookie Steve Kemp walked in the second to set up the first two Tiger runs Both scored on infield outs

Thompson hit a two-run homer.

The Tigers have won four straight, their longest winning streak of the season and the crowd was the second largest ever to see Fidrych pitch at home

Joan Walcott sorts through the mail.

Don't panic, Big Red fans

You haven't received your season tickets for Nebraska's home football games next fall yet?

Your neighbor got his two weeks ago and his name is Swanson and your name is Jones You begin to wonder what kind of an alphabet the university is using

If you're like several thousand other Big Red fans, you've phoned the ticket office to find out what's going on

What's going on, according to NU ticket manager Helen Ruth Wagner, is the painstaking task of processing nearly 40,000 season ticket orders — checking and cross-checking each one to see that they are properly filled

"We do have a system — one that has been carefully worked out over the years — even if some people don't seem to think so," Wagner jokes, still able to chuckle among all the headaches.

"Without going into all the details, the basic system is to fill the orders by sections," she explains "The alphabet has nothing to do with it We have boxes and boxes of unfilled orders yet to process But we're mailing out quite a batch every day The last tickets should be in the mail within the next two weeks"

So the word is, relax That's hard for most Big Red fans to do when a cool breeze blows through town on a summer day It feels like kickoff time

Minnesota fans love singles-hitting Carew

Bloomington, Minn. (UPI) — Babe Ruth and countless others heard the roar of the crowd when they hit home runs. But Rod Carew, Minnesota Twins' batting phenomenon, gets standing ovations just for hitting singles

Carew, shooting for his sixth american league batting championship, is burning up the place with singles — and doubles, triples and even some home runs

He has hit a red hot 477 in June, a fantastic .611 in one nine-game stretch through June 27, over .400 so far this season — and leads the league in runs, hits, total bases and triples.

"He's just fabulous," said Calvin Griffith, twins president

"I've been standing around with my mouth open in total admiration," said manager Gene Mauch.

When the figures were pointed out in an interview, Carew smiled and said:

"That's ridiculous, isn't it."

The fans love him and the twins' see-saw battle with the Chicago White Sox for the west division lead.

After small turnouts early this season, crowds are increasing. Last Sunday nearly 47,000 came out — a met Med stadium record for a regular season game.

The trim 6-foot first baseman is a cinch to be on the American League All-Star Team again — and he's been an all-star every year but one since he reached the majors in 1967

How does he do it?

"The ball is just finding holes," Carew said. "I use the whole field I don't try to pull the ball. I want to hit the ball all over the place

"I don't try to hit the ball out of the park I might hit a few home runs I can hit a long way if I really get hold of it but basically I'm a line drive hitter"

"At Seattle, I was trying to hit it out of the park and Gene stopped me and said, 'Rod. that isn't you' I got back to just hitting the ball"

Carew said he has several things going for him

"If the third baseman lays back, there's a good chance I can hit to third and beat it out. If he plays me in I can hit over him.

"I enjoy playing the game, I've developed confidence. I know I'm going to hit I don't worry about slumps because I know I'm going to work my way out of them"

Mauch played with Ted Williams in 1957 when Ted hit 388

"I thought I'd never see anything like that again," Mauch said, "But I was wrong. Carew gets some hits with his feet that Ted couldn't get because he's so fast.

"Ted would take some hits to left field when the outfield shifted for him If they gave Carew half the field to shoot at like that, he wouldn t be hitting 400 He'd be hitting 500.

July 4th weekend: Extra reason for safety

Safe boating week

Crowds. Congestion The annual Fourth of July thirst for water recreation is bound to pose safety hazards. That's one of the reasons the Fourth is always included in National Safe Boating Week.

The week, beginning July 3, is geared to call attention to boating safety. The masses of fishermen, sailboaters, canoers, water skiers, pleasure boaters and even swimmers are hazards enough for each other on popular three-day weekends.

"We don't have a lot of problems other than overcrowding," said Nebraska Game and Parks Commission law enforcement officer Andy Nielsen. "We have a lot of new boaters all the time and they don't have any place to learn about boating except on the water. The Coast Guard Auxiliary offers a course and we are just getting a program started, but other than that, it's on-the-water experience."

Bill Janssen, boating safety grant administrator for the commission, indicated Nebraska averages nearly five boating fatalities annually.

"The last fiscal year we had 37 accidents, 26 injuries and one death," said Janssen. "But we had an interim period from July through October when we had 31 more accidents, 12 injuries and two deaths.

"Boating is a common sense type of sport," Janssen said. "Accidents happen because people aren't thinking. If they'd think, most accidents can be avoided."

Collisions and speeding are the two main areas of concern, he pointed out. Boaters run into other boaters, and hit objects in the water such as stumps or bouys. A number of boaters also have trouble thinking out the time to slow boats down.

It's All Outdoors

By Tom Vint

"Speed is one thing causing some problems," Janssen said. "In a congested area, you just can't operate a boat as fast, but some people seem to think they can and get in trouble doing it."

Discourteous actions

Nielson indicated the commission gets reports nearly every weekend about discourteous action on the water.

"Some fisherman will call in that skiers or motorboaters have come to close to his boat," Nielson said. "Every weekend we hear this. On our small lakes in the Salt Valley you're going to have this There isn't enough water for the amount of recreation taking place on it I don't think a lot of that is deliberate, but we do have a few cases."

Nielson reported the biggest complaint is not on the water, but getting into and out of it for boaters. Waiting lines at boat launch areas are growing longer. Campers in boat launch parking lots are compounding the problem, especially when they beach their boats in the immediate area.

"People maybe aren't as considerate as they might be," Nielson said. "There isn't any law prohibiting them from camping there or beaching their boats, but it does create more congestion."

Congestion creates more safety problems

"We're going to have something like 50,000 boats registered this year," said Janssen. "That's just motorboats and doesn't include the nonpowered boats, canoes, sailboats and rowboats. When you have that many people, you can have problems.

"So many of these accidents, if you think about it, can be prevented. Boating isn't like hunting. When a hunter picks up a gun, the first thing on his mind is safety. Boaters just don't relate canoeing or boating to safety. They don't think these things can kill them.

"Deaths this year included a nonswimmer out in a canoe," Janssen said. "His life jacket was on the floor of the canoe when it turned over His buddy was able to swim to shore.

"Another case was the drowning at Branched Oak Lake. The victim was a good swimmer, but must have panicked Again, he didn't have on his life jacket, although a young boy threw one to him The law doesn't require an adult to wear a life jacket, but it doesn't do them any good just being in the boat."

Safe boating week runs from July 3-9. Think it through and use it as a model for the rest of your boating season Boating accidents can be prevented with a little common sense.

Expos snap Cubs' 8-game skein

Montreal (AP) — Righthander Jackie Brown pitched a seven-hitter as the Montreal Expos broke the Chicago Cubs' eight-game winning streak with a 5-0 victory Wednesday night

Brown, 5-6, struck out one and walked none to record his first victory since a 2-0 blanking of the Astros on June 15 in Houston. He had lost two games since

Andre Dawson was the Expos' offensive star, collecting four singles in four appearances, scoring two runs and driving in another

Teammate Warren Cromartie had a pair of singles and a double in four at-bats and scored twice while Dave Cash drove in a pair of runs with a single and a sacrifice fly

The victory was the first for the Expos against Cubs starter Ray Burris since May 29 1976 Burris, 9-6, lasted 4 2-3 innings, giving up five runs on 10 hits as he lost for the first time in his last seven decisions against Montreal He was 4 1 against the Expos in 1976 and had two victories over Montreal earlier this season

Olympic price-gouging their target

Lake Placid, N Y (AP) — Local organizers for the 1980 Winter Olympics are seeking state legislation to prevent price-gouging at hotels during the Games, it was revealed Wednesday.

"We want to protect the hotel industry during the Olympic period from any unfair rate gouging, so we can emerge from the Olympics with a good hospitality reputation" said Howard Baker, chairman of the Guest Services sub-committee

He said the plan would create a state Olympic Housing Authority, to set rates.

Shackles, daylight, courtroom change picture for 4 inmates

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

The inmates, the police, the news media, the County-City Building.

All of the elements which made a national event Monday night, mixed again Wednesday but the script had been changed.

Shackles, the light of day and the Lancaster County Court room changed the picture for Donald Routhier, Robert Parker, Robert Bessent and Marvin Gerheardt, the four inmates who held two hostages at knifepoint for nearly seven hours Monday night in an unsuccessful escape attempt from the city jail.

In the aftermath of the first escape involving hostages, it was the law's turn to steal the show. County Attorney Ron Lahners was the star in Judge Robert Camp's court as he read three felony counts against each of the four, who could face up to 110 years, each, in the Nebraska Penal Complex for their Monday night performance.

Routhier was first, as Lahners read the charges, two counts of being an inmate detaining another, each punishable by terms of 10 to 50 years in prison; and one count of using a dangerous weapon to commit a felony, punishable by three to 10 years in prison.

"Do you understand the charges filed against you?" Lahners asked.

"I hear the charges, but you can't charge me according to the paper you gave me the other night," Routhier, the alleged spokesman during the Monday incident, replied.

Lahners repeated his question and Routhier said, "Yeh."

Camp explained that the inmate had the right to represented by an attorney, and asked if he wanted court-appointed counsel.

"I want (deputy public defender) Toney Redman," Routhier replied.

Bessent, 23; Gerheardt, 32 and Parker, 24, repeated the same procedure, although they limited their remarks to a simple "yes" and "no." The three are charged with the same felonies and face the same punishment.

And, like Routhier, they all asked for Toney Redman, even though the young attorney said he has no idea why, and that he has never talked to any of the four.

Public Defender Clement Gaughn expressed surprise that they asked for Toney, but said, "They'll probably get him if they want him."

The court appearance was over in a matter of minutes, and the four were escorted out of the room by five Lancaster County deputy sheriffs and five Lincoln policemen.

Routhier attempted to hand a letter to a woman outside the courtroom, but wasn't allowed to do so. Police later said it was a letter to his girlfriend (apparently the woman) and that it was given to her after it had been read by officials.

Routhier, Bessent and Gerheardt were returned to the penal complex where they had been transferred late Tuesday afternoon. Parker was returned to a cell in the city jail.

Lahners explained that the trio had posed the "greatest threat to security in the jail" and were thus transferred out. Routhier and Bessent were due to begin serving time at the prison for their part in the robbery of two clerks at the Congress Inn Motel, 2001 West O, earlier this year. Gerheardt was awaiting trial in District court on a burglary charge and Parker was in federal custody on a grand larceny charge.

Their next joint court appearance will be July 12, at 9 a.m. when Camp will set preliminary hearings on the charges filed Wednesday. The status of federal charges — expected to be filed because one of the hostages was a deputy U.S. marshal, 36-year-old Jack Douglas — is still unknown.

Lahners said he would seek to "prosecute the four to the fullest extent of the law" because of the nature of the incident. "There will be no plea bargaining," and the sentences will run consecutively, he added. Bond had been set at $50,000 for each of the men.

Lahners explained that the "paper" Routhier mentioned was a statement from Assistant Police Chief Roger LaPage stating that he (LaPage) wouldn't press charges against the men. LaPage later explained that he has no authority to file charges.

The paper, which Lahners said was signed "under extremely coercive circumstances," was not a valid document. He said that Lincoln attorney Murry J. Shaeffer and Police Lt. Lee Wagner had also signed the document.

Asked about the tight security, and the fact that the men were led on the route usually taken by prisoners from the jail to the courtroom (instead of in a back door), Lahners said it was to "protect them from themselves." He noted that they remained shackled at the agreement of the court.

High court rules on negligence in snowstorms

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

Although it was hot and sunny Wednesday, the Nebraska Supreme Court apparently had its mind on snowstorms.

The high court reversed two decisions on cases stemming from accidents during snowstorms. In each case, a vehicle was stuck in the snow on a hill when another vehicle collided with it.

The court ordered a new trial in a Holt County case involving LaVerne Overweg and George Van Conet, who were involved in an accident in February 1971.

Van Conet's truck was being pulled from a snowdrift on U.S. 281 about nine miles north of St. Paul when Overweg's tractor-trailer collided with it.

A lower court ruled Overweg was guilty of negligence for not keeping a proper lookout that would have allowed him to stop before hitting Van Conet's truck. Van Conet received a summary judgment in his favor.

But the Supreme Court ruled that both drivers were negligent, since Van Conet did not set out flares or lights to warn appraoching traffic that his truck was blocking the road. A jury should decide who was more negligent, the high court ruled.

In another case, however, the court ruled that the driver of a car left abandoned on a roadside in a snowdrift was not negligent when his auto was struck by another car.

Stan Vrba's car became stuck on a Thurston County road on the night of February 4, 1975 and he walked home. The next morning, Ronny Kelly collided with Vrba's car.

Kelly said he was driving 25 or 30 miles per hour and visibility was only about 50 feet because of blowing snow.

The high court said Kelly was driving too fast to be able to keep a proper lookout and thus was negligent. But Vrba was not negligent ecause he had parked as far to the right as possible and it was impossible for him to provide a clear view of the car during the snowstorm, the court noted.

The high court ordered Thurston County District Court to render a judgment in favor of Vrba.

CBer Rice loses appeal of manslaughter conviction

Clyde Rice, whose argument over a citizens' band radio channel resulted in the death of a Greenwood man, lost his bid for a lighter sentence from the Nebraska Supreme Court.

Rice was convicted in April 1976 of manslaughter for running over Don Edelman with a pickup truck. The two men had been arguing over the use of a CB radio channel and met in the Veterans of Foreign Wars parking lot to settle their differences.

Although the original charge was first degree murder, a Lancaster County District Court jury reduced the charge to manslaughter. Rice was sentenced to two years in the Nebraska Penal Complex.

In his appeal to the high court, Rice contended his sentence was excessive. His attorneys contended Rice was borderline mentally retarded and had no criminal record.

But the high court refused to lighten the sentence, saying the penalty was well within the district court's discretion. Manslaughter is punishable in the state by prison terms ranging from one to 10 years, the high court noted.

"The evidence is overwhelming that (Rice) is guilty of a violent crime which caused the death of another," the high court said. A sentence of probation could depreciate the seriousness of the crime, the court added.

Three other criminal appeals from Lancaster District Court were also upheld by the high court Wednesday.

The court denied an appeal from Michael Frederick, who was sentenced last August to 18 months to three years in prison for passing an insufficient fund check.

Freddie M. Schoneweis lost his appeal of a driving with .10% alcohol in the blood conviction in which he was fined $100 and lost his license for six months. He had argued he should have been put on probation.

James Adams lost an appeal of a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Adams received 30 days in jail and lost his license for one year, but thought he should have received probation.

In each case, the high court noted that the sentences were well within the discretionary limits given to courts by state statutes, and would not be overturned.

Developers told county to require water reports

By Bob Reeves
Star Staff Writer

A regulation which may stave off battles over groundwater in Lancaster County began seeping into effect this week.

The county board won't approve the measure until next week, but Tuesday the commissioners gave the go-ahead to developers seeking subdivision permits to begin complying with it.

By an amendment to the county's subdivision regulations, the board intends to require a report by "a registered professional engineer with collaboration by a graduate geologist with a major in hydrology" to accompany each plat application.

Copies of the report must be filed with the Conservation and Survey Division of the University of Nebraska for review, the draft amendment states.

Preparation of the amendment has held up applications for three subdivision permits: Pawnee Estates, on W. Fletcher St.; Savage Acres, at 84th and Davey Road; and Finnigan's subdivision at 84th and Waverly Road.

The engineer's report must describe the chemical quality of the water supply and the flow in gallons per minute from test wells. It must also tell how far underground the water is, what kind of strata bears the water, and provide an inventory of wells on adjacent property.

State Geologist Vince Dreeszen, who helped prepare the amendment, admits that no study can be 100% sure. No engineer's report can give a guarantee over several years that water will still be there, he said.

"This same kind of appraisal is required of any village or city," Dreeszen said.

In past years, this would have been a prohibitive requirement in Nebraska because there were so few water consultants available, he noted.

Engineers are plentiful now, but they're not cheap. The cost of complying with the county's amendment could run a developer anywhere from $4,000 to $8,000, Dreeszen said.

These costs presumably would be passed along to homebuyers.

Besides measuring the depth and flow of the water, the engineer must report the rate at which the water level goes down while pumping.

A well must maintain a rapid enough recharge to take care of peak demands, Dreeszen explained. Many rural wells can deliver enough water for a family per day, but not enough when everybody in the family wants to use it at once.

There have been isolated cases of wells running dry in recent months, but these can often be discounted, Dreeszen noted. Sometimes what appears to be a dry well is really a faulty pump or a well that is improperly maintained.

The board's amendment is designed to help prevent the kinds of water fights that are actually beginning to occur in some western states.

The availability of groundwater will limit population growth so long as people have to rely on wells rather than long-distance transfer of water.

City-County Planning Director Doug Brogden explained that some water problems are arising because development in being encouraged in areas where groundwater supplies are poor.

The Comprehensive Plan calls for growth to the west and north, where underground water is scarce or salty. Other environmental considerations take precedence over water availability in planning, Brogden said.

Lincoln's water system does not extend beyond the city limits.

One of the best water supplies in the country is south of Hickman, underneath the site of the Norris School complex, Dreeszen said.

But no truly accurate map of groundwater supplies is available, Brogden cautioned. This is part of the reason for the amendment.

Commission must clear up disclosure law misinformation

By Don Walton
Star Staff Writer

Members of the Nebraska Political Accountability and Disclosure Commission agreed Wednesday that one of their first tasks will be the need to clear up misunderstandings about the financial disclosure provisions of the new "sunshine law."

The law becomes fully effective Friday, but the first disclosure statements are not due until April 1, 1978.

It was the "sunshine law" which created the Accountability and Disclosure Commission.

Both the public and officeholders seem to have received "all kinds of misinformation" about financial disclosure requirements, commission Chairman Mimi Waldbaum of Omaha said.

Wally Peterson of Lincoln, chairman of a subcommittee on financial interest reporting, said he is aware of all kinds of "wild stories" about disclosure sections of the law.

Despite common misunderstanding, Peterson noted, officeholders and candidates are not required to attach any dollar value to their sources of income or financial holdings.

And financial disclosure provisions of the law do not apply to as many candidates or officeholders as campaign reporting requirements in the act, he said.

Peterson suggested that the commission consult the attorney general's office for a legal opinion on exactly what the law requires from whom in terms of financial disclosure, then make that information available to candidates and officeholders in printed form.

Disclosure seems to the portio of the sunshine act which is most "worrisome" to those covered by its provisions, Peterson noted.

Secretary of State Allen Beermann said inquiries directed to his office have centered on the need to define how much of a spouse's financial interests must be disclosed and what the law means by "indirect" sources of wealth.

Ms. Waldbaum said she has been contacted by people who seem to fear that they may be subject to robbery if they reveal a list of all their holdings.

In other action, the commission named Ms. Waldbaum, Peterson and Mickey Staley of Omaha to screen applications for the post of commission executive director.

Fishing is medicine for former Omaha veterinarian

Minneapolis (UPI) — Dr. Chan Cotton is a muskie fisherman who never misses a day and calls fishing "my medicine."

When he was 40, Cotton was struck by a severe heart attack. A second attack the next year convinced him to sell his veterinary practice in Omaha, Neb., and go fishing.

Now he is 47 and healthy, but he is afraid he may have to go back to work.

Cotton and his wife, Betty, moved to Walker, Minn., where they fish together on Leech Lake, their favorite for muskies.

"Fishing's more relaxing, much less tension than work," Cotton said in a telephone interview. "I was taking nine nitro pills a day for my heart when I sold my practice.

"I haven't taken one the past year. It goes to show how much heart attacks are connected with work. Fishing is my medicine."

How does he survive without working in three years?

"It's getting tough," Cotton said. "We're debating whether I should go back to the practice. There is a need for vets up here. It would be tough arranging schedules to fish, but I wouldn't let the job interfere with my fishing."

Cotton keeps only trophy muskies, usually one a season. One year he boated 108 muskies and returned 107.

His largest muskie was caught last Sept. 22. It was 56½ inches long. His favorite method is to use a large spinner and drift, while casting with a fast retrieve reel.

July is the best time to go for muskies on Leech Lake and Cotton said he usually fishes Portage Bay on the northeast side.

"There is more muskies in that area than any place in the world — even the famous Chippewa Flowage of Wisconsin. Nobody knows why. It constantly produces fish," he said.

For those unfamiliar with muskie fishing, it takes an expert fishermen from 60 to 100 hours to boat a legal sized muskie. By law, those under 30 inches must be released in Minnesota.

He has boated 12 muskies so far this year and returned all of them. The largest was 48½ inches, and weighed 40 pounds, 3 ounces.

'Satch' Sanders goes to Celtics

Boston (UPI) — Tom, (Satch) Sanders, 38, a 13-year veteran of the Boston Celtics and more recently head basketball mentor at Harvard University, was named Wednesday as the new Celtics' assistant coach.

The announcement was made by Celtics' President and General Manager Red Auerbach, who refused to divulge details of his new employe's contract, but Sanders later acknowledged the pact was for more than two years.

Sanders replaces former Celtics' Assistant Coach and Head Scout John Killilea who last week resigned to take a similar post with the Milwaukee Bucks, now coached by former Celtic forward Don Nelson.

During the past four years, Sanders compiled a 40-60 record as head basketball coach for Harvard.

Bunny Richards back on the job

By Chuck Sinclair
Staff Sports Writer

Nebraska golf enthusiasts will be pleased to know that less than a month after open-heart surgery, Hillcrest Country Club professional Bunny Richards is back on the job sporting full-time hours.

Although he admits a full schedule is rather taxing at this stage, he wouldn't have it any other way

"I've really been feeling pretty good," Richards says "I'm not completely through with surgery, but the most crucial is over It's great to be back"

Just as Bunny gets back, a prestigious event will be making a return to Hillcrest after a nine-year absence, the Nebraska Amateur Golf Assn 1977 State Amateur Championships scheduled to run July 27-30

The NAGA has enlisted the aid of eight time champion Bob Astleford in helping Richards run the tournament Astleford, the NAGA tournament director and Richards will handle tournament operations for the 72-hole event.

The state's major golf tournament is open to the first 150 male Nebraska residents with a handicap of eight or less with a pro-am scheduled to preceede the tourney on Monday

Entries must reach the NAGA office, Box 1492, Grand Island, 68801, before July 17, and be among the first 150 to be accepted

When Jack Nicklaus was in Omaha last week, he discussed the differences in design and set-up of a golf course in reference to the recently completed U.S. Open.

Nicklaus said that it's the way the course is set-up by the U.S.G.A., not the design, that usually has the pros scratching their heads by the time their rounds are finished.

If the state's golfers are scratching their heads after playing in the amateur, it won't be because of such strict controls

"We work together with the NAGA on how the course might be set-up for tournament play," Richards commented. "But the final decision is ours in all cases They can make recommendations on pin placements and tees, but they wouldn't think of asking you to let your rough grow

"There won't be any major changes in the course from now until the tournament," Richards added "I had a call from the state amateur body to set up a meeting with myself and our superintendent Maury Spence to discuss possible pin placements and things like that"

While there will be no major changes in the course, players who have not played the course since the last state amateur held there in 1968 will notice some definite changes, among them a large fairway trap down the left side of No. 1 fairway.

They will find other changes along with the 10 years growth of all the trees.

"It should be a challenging course for the tournament," Richards said. "It will be interesting."

Here are some other golf notes of local interest:

—The Aurora Open Golf Tournament originally scheduled for June 26th has been rescheduled until August 14th at the Aurora Country Club.

—There will be a public hearing in the Council Chamber of the County-City Building Thursday at 7:30 p.m. for the purpose of discussing and hearing comments regarding fee structures for Lincoln's municipal golf course.

—Entries are open for the men's city golf tournament starting this year on the two public courses followed by a cut to the low 80 players and ties (low 30 in the seniors) then a move to the two country clubs.

—The Lincoln Women's Municipal Golf Assn. 4 club tournament is scheduled for Tuesday at Holmes with a luncheon following.

—The Lincoln Municipal Golfer's Assn. is holding a Scotch twosome tournament at Mahoney Park July 9 open to all members

—Hidden Valley Golf Course is holding a Fourth of July Couples tournament with a 1 p.m. starting time. Participants may sign up at the course.

Ude pitches perfect game

Dick Ude hurled a perfect five-inning game and Valentino's backed him with a pair of eight-run innings in a 16-0 win over Arnold's Tavern Wednesday night in the AAA fast pitch-league at Ballard Field.

Ude struck out three in gaining his eighth win in as many starts and Val's scored eight runs in the second and eight more in the fifth.

Dan Schrader's grand slam homer and a solo shot by Rick Kahler keyed the second inning burst and Dennis Kuenning hit a three-run homer in the fifth.

The win lifted Val's (12-2) to within one game of league-leading Misty Lounge (14-2). The two will meet Fridy night at 8:30.

Gary Healy had a triple, double and single and scored three times and Harry Kasischke gained his seventh win without a loss as Dick Flynn Buick dumped Stan's Lounge, 8-3, in Wednesday's nightcap. The win kept Flynn's (11-4) within striking distance of the leaders.

Rod Yoekl homered for Flynn's.

Cup rule okayed

London (AP) — Nations whose players compete in the Davis Cup tennis competition acted Wednesday to prevent teams from withdrawing from the events for political reasons.

Meeting in London they decided that any nation pulling out after the draw has been made will be disqualified the following year.

4 Hawthorne teams win

Four teams gained wins in the Al Hawthorne League Wednesday night at Elk's Field. Waverly-Stan's and Ball Real Estate gained splits while Sam's lost twice.

Money is Racers' NHL roadblock

Indianapolis (UPI) — The Indianapolis Racers must come up with a financial package of between $3.5 and $5 million within a week if they want to be part of an expanded National Hockey League, it was disclosed Wednesday.

David Givens, general counsel of Indiana National Bank, which recently took over the assets of the financially pressed WHA entry, told a news conference upon his return from WHA meetings in New York the bank was prepared "to assist in making a successful application" for NHL membership.

He said the Racers' partnership must decide by July 6 whether to seek membership in the NHL for the 1977-78 season because the NHL is expected to act on such applications July 14.

The NHL proposed a merger with at least six WHA teams at its meetings in Chicago last week. Indianapolis was not one of the WHA franchises mentioned.

However, Givens said, "to the best of our knowledge, the Racers have a right to apply for NHL membership."

Big Ten, Pac-8 object to bowl

From news wires

The Olympia Challenge Bowl, announced Tuesday as an all-star clash between seniors from the Big Ten and Pacific 8 conferences, has drawn objections from both conferences.

Commissioner Wayne Duke said Wednesday the Big Ten objects to its senior football players participating in the game next January in Seattle and Pac-8 Executive Director Wiles Hallock said that conference has no involvement with and has not endorsed the game.

Duke said, however, that neither conference could prevent the seniors from playing.

"They play in the Senior Bowl and that's the same thing," Duke said.

"Sponsors of the game have been in touch with us but the Pac-8 is not officially connected with the game in any form," Hallock said. "It is my personal belief that our members will not encourage their players to participate."

U.S. athletes star in World Games

Helsinki (UPI) — Americans dominated the start of the two-day 11th World Games Track and Field meet at Helsinki Olympic Stadium Wednesday as cold weather and a threat of rain reduced attendance to only 13,549 fans.

Tom Andrews, Bakersfield, Calif. won the 400-meter hurdles in 49.6 in a hard fight with Wes Williams, San Diego, who finished in 49.7. Williams was ahead until a few meters from the finish line, but had to give into Andrew's strong finish. Last year's Olympic fourth, Quentin Wheeler finished third.

Rosalyn Bryant of Chicago took a convincing win in the women's 400 meters. Bryant finished on 52.7, beating Beth Nail, Australia, 53.3 and Finland's Pirjo Haeggman, who finished on 53.6.

Henry March, of Brigham Young University, proved the strongest in the men's 3,000-meter steeplechase. After a rocket finish over the last 50 meters he cut the wire at 8:27.9, just ahead of Kenya's James Munyala. Finland's Tapio Kantanen was left behind at the 2,400 meter mark, after a move to gain a lead on the previous lap, and finished third.

In the men's 800 meters, Kenyan Mike Boit was in a class of his own. He took command of the race on the first lap and won at 1:44.6.

Boit said after the race he would like to race against Cuban Alberto Juantorena, who won the Olympic 800 meters. Juantorena is running only one event at Helsinki, Thursday's 400 meters.

"I'd like a real race, where I don't have to do all the work myself," Boit said.

A breakdown of the electric time-keeping system marred the men's 100 meters. Cuban ace Silvio Leonard sped to a fine 10 0 victory in the fastest race Helsinki spectators ever have seen Guy Abrahams, Panama, Charlie Wells, U.S.A., and Haseley Crawford, Trinidad, all clocked 10.1.

Cuban David Giralt created a small sensation in the men's long jump by beating Olympic Champion Arnie Robinson of San Diego. After a tie at 25-5-7/8 after three jumps, Giralt stretched to a winning 26-1-3/8 in his final try.

Two holes-in-one recorded

The Hillcrest Country Club yielded two holes-in-one last Saturday as Annie Settell and Larry Rowan each recorded an ace.

With her husband, Bob Settell, looking on, Mrs. Settell stroked a three-wood shot into the cup on the 114-yard par three No. 12 hole.

Rowan picked up his ace on the No. 8 par three 157-yard hole. Mel Mooberry, Joe Grovier, Lov Ottemann, Bob Caesav and Bud Brown witnessed Rowan's four-iron shot.

2. Independent owners did the comparing.

63% of those who tested a Ford LTD and a Chevy Impala chose the LTD.

In a recent independent test 50 Ford and 50 Chevy owners selected at random in the Los Angeles area rated both Ford LTD and Impala for:
- Overall styling
- Interior and exterior features
- Roominess
- Trunk space
- Parking
- Driving under city, freeway and residential conditions

There were 55 separate tests in total. At the conclusion of these tests. all were asked if they had to choose, which of these cars they would be more likely to buy. The answer? 63% or nearly two out of three chose a Ford LTD

So if you're in the habit of buying an Impala without comparing, kick the habit and compare. Because this year there are surprising differences between Ford LTD and Impala.

FCC clears NCAA TV clout

Washington (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission ruled Wednesday it cannot prevent the National Collegiate Athletic Association from keeping off television the games of schools which violate NCAA rules

The 6-1 vote, with Commissioner Benjamin L. Hooks dissenting, upheld an FCC Broadcast Bureau ruling Jan 31 denying an appeal by Dr. John Irvan Moritzky Choate of Sand Springs, Okla.

Choate, on Aug. 5, 1975, asked the commission to investigate possible television censorship of athletic contests.

He contended the NCAA had adopted a policy of using access to television to ensure compliance with its rules.

Powerlifting event slated

The 1977 AAU Junior National Powerlifting Championships will be competed in Lincoln Saturday and Sunday.

Over 130 lifters from 32 states are entered. The designation "junior" has nothing to do with the ages of the competitors, meet chairman Roger Benjamin explains.

"Some of the best in the world will be on hand," Benjamin predicts. "A lifter is in the so-called junior class as long as he hasn't won a national title at the weight in which he will compete."

Lincoln's Mike Arthur, the top featherweight in the world last year, is eligible since he will be entered at 132 pounds.

Arthur set a deadlift world record of 540 pounds last year and his combined three-lift total of 1,210 pounds was the best in the world in 1976.

A physique competition — the winner will be crowned "Mr. Junior USA" — will also be held. Twenty-one entries from 15 states will be on hand. The current Mr. Nebraska, Chad Leonardi of Lincoln, defeated two top national performers last weekend in the Mr. Great Plains contest in St. Joseph, Mo.

Another top local entry in the lifting competition is super heavyweight Howard Nissen. A state trooper, the 294-pound Nissen is a member of the governor's security force as a bodyguard for Gov. Exon.

The schedule of events, all to be conducted in the east and west ballrooms of the Radisson Cornhusker Hotel:

Saturday

9 a.m. — 114, 123 and 132 pound classes
10 a.m. — Pre judging of physique competition
1 p.m. — 148 and 165-pound classes
8 p.m. — Finals of physique competition

Sunday

9:30 a.m. — 181 and 198 pound classes
2 p.m. — 220, 242 and super heavyweight classes

Edna Stengel gravely ill

Glendale, Calif. (AP) — Mrs. Edna Stengel, widow of baseball great Casey Stengel, remained gravely ill but in stable condition Wednesday, according to a Glenoaks Convelescent Hospital spokeswoman.

Mrs. Stengel, 82, suffered a stroke last week. She has been in the hospital for five years because of poor health

The former Edna Lawson was married to Stengel 52 years. Stengel, Hall of Fame manager for the New York Yankees, died of cancer in 1975 at the age of 85

Stengel led the Yankees to 10 American League pennants and seven World Series championships.

Martin named NP track coach

Colleges meet with IRS today

Washington (AP) — A group of colleges will try to persuade the Internal Revenue Service Thursday that income derived from the televising and broadcasting of athletic contests should be tax-exempt.

Lawyers for the Cotton Bowl Association, a subsidiary of the Southwest Conference, as well as representatives for Southern Methodist University, Texas Christian University and Kansas will discuss the issue with IRS officials at the headquarters here.

The outcome of the conference will have a major effect on all colleges, one that could cost schools across the country $150 million in back taxes.

In a recent memorandum to members, J. Neils Thompson, president of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, described the potential IRS action as "a serious threat to the financial health of intercollegiate athletic programs."

In a routine audit of the Cotton Bowl in 1973, an IRS agent in Dallas concluded that television receipts were unrelated business income and thus outside the customary tax-exemt status for schools and colleges. The Dallas office, however, asked IRS headquarters in Washington for "technical advice."

Under such circumstances, the taxpayer can ask for a conference to discuss the issue. After one such conference, there was an indication that IRS was going to issue an adverse finding, meaning that the Cotton Bowl would have to come up with taxes for the past three years, plus seven per cent interest, or about $2.5 million.

The Cotton Bowl then asked for another hearing — the one Thursday — so that additional arguments could be made.

Blue chips slip further

New York (AP) — Prices of blue chip stocks slipped further in light trading Wednesday continuing a pessimistic trend of early this week

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 2 29 to 913 33 bringing the net loss for this week to more than 16 points

But overall, losing issues outnumbered gainers by only a small fraction Among 1,863 issues traded on the New York Stock Exchange, 716 lost and 676 advanced

Trading was broadly lower early in the session as the Dow index dropped about 5 points and more than twice as many issues posted losses as gains before regaining ground in the afternoon

Dow Ind. -2.29

At the market's opening, the Commerce Department announced a slight decline in its May economic indicator index ending consecutive increases in the index for the prior three months

Although the news was somewhat expected, analysts noted it added to pessimism about the economic outlook.

Brokers also attributed part of the decline to a carryover of fairly strong selling that started late Tuesday after budget director Bert Lance increased his budget deficit estimate for the next fiscal year.

An Agriculture Department report reflecting a slowdown in farm price increases was noted as a positive factor influencing the market comeback in the afternoon by easing inflation worries

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrial stocks closed off .04 at 110 30 The S&P 500-stock composite index dipped .03 to 100 11.

Such strong components of the Dow industrial average as steel and chemical issues showed particular weakness recently following reports of a decline in July steel orders and published analyst reports pessimistic about earnings prospects of a number of chemical concerns.

The NYSE's composite index closed off .04 at 54 90 On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 11 at 119 58

Turkish vodka is made from beets

New York (UPI) — Most vodka is made from potatoes or grain But in Turkey it is made from white beets and the first brand of that type to reach the United States is currently going into stores nationwide

It's a clear beverage 80 proof but there the resemblance to potato and grain spirits ends The distinctive aroma of the other types is missing and to some persons, the mild flavor seems more akin to white brandies than traditional vodkas

Opponents of more aid short by 500 volunteers

The likelihood of a referendum to block the $20 million increase in state aid to education is growing slimmer with each passing summer day.

Only half the number of volunteers needed to successfully circulate petitions for the 54,000 to 60,000 signatures have stepped forward, said S H. Brauer Jr , executive secretary of the Nebraska School Improvement Association (NSIA).

Brauer's survey last week showed much too strong support to drop the effort but not enough support to ensure its success "without a tremendous sacrifice on the part of the volunteers," he said

It would take at least 1,000 volunteers to get the signatures needed to suspend the 1977 law and put the issue on the 1978 ballot. So far Brauer said he has received responses from 400 to 500 willing workers

"I'm not going to go back a second and third time, like we did in 1975, and ask volunteers to gather more signatures," he said

Another problem is that the team leaders from the successful 1974 referendum campaign have not volunteered Even former state Sen Ramey Whitney of Chappell, a 1974 leader, is reluctant to assume the task again this year.

Whitney said he is busy with the wheat harvest and cannot take time out to campaign against the law setting up consecutive increases in state aid from $55 million to $115 million in three years.

"Someone else will have to lead it," Whitney said.

But Brauer is still counting on Whitney's taking a major role. He needs Whitney's contacts with other groups to forge a successful coalition, he said

The NSIA's partner in the 1974 effort, the AFL-CIO, balking this year, Brauer said. Without union organizations circulating petitions, finding qualified volunteers to gain signatures in urban areas becomes more difficult, he said

Brauer is currently considering placing an advertisement explaining the referendum drive in the state's major dailies to seek support from urban areas

He is also hoping to find other organizations willing to help in the drive.

"If anyone takes this for granted and thinks someone else is going to do the foot work, they're going to be fooled," he said

Any decision to go ahead with the drive must be made by the middle of July in order to give volunteers time to circulate petitions before the Sept 2 deadline, Brauer said

The petition has been drawn and sent to the printer, Brauer said If a go-ahead decision is made, it will be ready.

Cancer funds extended

Omaha (AP) — The Eppley Cancer Institute, part of the University of Nebraska Medical Center, will receive a three-month extension of its 1976-77 contract with the National Cancer Institute, an Eppley official said Tuesday

The $3 1 million contract, the institute's major source of funds, was to end June 30

The General Accounting Office is expected to report in August on its investigation of the institute's contracts with the National Cancer Institute and use of federal funds

Dr. Philip Issenberg, associate director of the Eppley Institute, said its officials will be negotiating a new contract with the National Cancer Institute during the next three months

The Eppley Institute expects to receive about the same funding during the three-month extension as it received during the last year, he said

Popularity Poll: It is not easy to pick a favorite sign because I think my own sign Capricorn is the best ... but after weighing all pros and cons I choose Taurus. Believe me, this is not easy because Taurus people irritate me to no end! But I do have a very high respect for Taurus. Taurus people are kind to their enemies. You know there are times when I wish my Taurus friends didn't like me so much. —Jane Ranon, Duluth, Minn. Comment: I know what you mean, Jane. With friends like you have, who needs enemies.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your views are sought by one high up — define your terms and set your fee. Be realistic. Don't sell yourself short. Know that community standards prevail — you can't crusade in half-hearted manner. Patience, keen observation, persistence win for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Long-range view is necessary. What seemed a fantasy comes into focus. Hints available if you study Aries message. Philosophical matters dominate. Past and present seem to blend. You have chance to apply lessons learned through experience. Capricorn is in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish tasks which had been put aside — get credit due you. Aries, Libra figure prominently. Accent on money of partner, mate. One who rents to you or makes loan expresses curiosity about your activities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on legalities, public relations, the finish of a deal, a renewed contract under different conditions. Be direct, independent without being arrogant. Member of opposite sex has a real interest in you. That soon will be proven.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Follow through — rise above petty details. Teach and learn. Ingratiate yourself with one who has mastered a phase of operations essential to ultimate success of your mission. One who understands principles of survival plays a very significant role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lunar position emphasizes chance, speculative ventures, activity connected with children, intensified relationship. Creative juices are activated. Fun, activity, your own style, personal magnetism — these are all part of an exciting scenario.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Check fine print — read between the lines. Deal with one who in recent past has been erratic. Accent on steadiness, foolproof safety measures, airtight property arrangements, mature decisions regarding your own — and family — security. You'll understand!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Activity, inquiries, relatives with complaints, questions, requests are in picture. Short trips, out-of-way places to dine are also part of scenario. Member of opposite sex makes life worth living — your communications antenna is up, vibrant, operating full steam.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Full Moon position accents what you possess, what is of value, the love and security, the beauty in your life. Yes, an accounting takes place. You may or may not be found wanting — but you have a glorious opportunity to sum up, to be truthful with — you. Do so!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Full Moon cycle favors you — you can define, slice thin, be rid of extraneous material, the fat, the superfluous. Take initiative. Be open to romance, creativity, love. Refuse to take back seat to hackneyed characters who can only repeat cliches. You'll comprehend!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You gain enlightenment — and in this case knowledge could be frightening. Know it and keep events in proper perspective. You're powerful? Did you realize it? Capricorn, Cancer figure in picture — and so does the number 8. Yes, you will succeed, be vindicated and secure.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emphasis on what you say and the effect of your words. Social mores, social justice, social activity all are in picture. Your sensitivity, extrasensory perception figure prominently. Aries, Libra persons play key roles.

IF JUNE 30th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are versatile, somewhat of a comedian — you are conscious of physical fitness, have a weight problem, deal extensively with Gemini, Sagittarius persons. February and November are indicated as outstanding months for you in 1977. In July, you make vital discovery, enhance your security, get rid of what has been a burden and you contact persons who can aid in bringing about a feeling of worth, confidence.

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Chambers' complaint leads to investigation

Omaha (UPI) — A complaint by State Sen. Ernest Chambers that Omaha police officers mistreated a black woman and her son following a rock-throwing incident has prompted a federal investigation.

U.S. Attorney Daniel Wherry said the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division investigated the incident, but no decision had been made whether to pursue the complaint.

Chambers said police officers arrested Mrs. Lillian E. Sheppard, a black woman, after she demanded that a white woman release her son.

The white woman had taken Ronald Sheppard, 9, to her apartment while she called police after she was told that boys were throwing rocks at her car.

Officers said when they arrived at the apartment, Mrs. Sheppard was upset and abusive. They handcuffed her and took both Mrs. Sheppard and her son to police headquarters.

She was charged with disorderly conduct, but the charge was later dropped.

Several days later, the white woman involved was arrested for allegedly threatening a white child with scissors, and was hospitalized for mental observation.

Chambers contended the police officers erred in arresting Mrs. Sheppard and her son rather than the woman who detained the boy.

Chambers said the failure of police to charge the white woman, even when she threatened the white child, showed the difference between the way police handle cases involving whites and blacks.

The city attorney's office said it has decided against taking any action against the officers.

"Although the officers' conduct might have been improvident, it does not appear under the law to constitute a violation of Mrs. Sheppard's federally protected rights," said Deputy City Attorney James Fellows.

Berrigan suspects Rice may have been 'framed'

Omaha (AP) — The Rev. Daniel Berrigan, an anti-war activist during the late 1960s, said Wednesday he "has a growing suspicion" that David L. Rice, convicted slayer of an Omaha police officer, was "framed."

Father Berrigan, in Omaha to speak at Creighton University, said he has asked twice to visit Rice at the Nebraska Penal Complex but twice has been rejected. The latest rejection was during this visit to Nebraska.

Father Berrigan said he will meet with attorneys and Rice's mother to see if there is a way to force prison officials to permit a meeting. He said the Rev. William Cunningham, a Jesuit priest and lawyer from Santa Clara University, is coming to Omaha to discuss the Rice case.

On other subjects, Father Berrigan criticized President Carter for "reneging on his campaign promises" to reduce military spending. He said Carter has delayed a decision on whether to fund construction of the B1 bomber as a "prepared canard" to mislead the public.

And he hit what he called "the atrocious SAC base" in Bellevue for its part in what he called "nuclear madness."

Hebron man, 89, accused of shooting son in argument

Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Hebron — An 89-year-old man has been jailed here for allegedly shooting his son, 55, during an argument over placing the father in a nursing home.

Pash Hendershot has been charged with "shooting with intent to wound or maim." The son, Walter L. Hendershot, is reported in good condition at Thayer County Memorial Hospital.

Thayer County sheriff. Jim Johnson, said the elder Hendershot is believed to have shot the son in the chest with a .32 caliber pistol. The incident allegedly occurred Monday noon.

Johnson was called after the wounded man went to the hospital for treatment. The sheriff said the suspect offered no resistance when he then went to his home.

In an initial appearance before Associate County Judge Robert L. Stutz, bond was set at $50,000. Attorney Lyle Koenig was appointed to represent the defendant, pending a preliminary hearing, which has not yet been scheduled.

According to Johnson, the defendant's wife is already a resident of the Blue Valley Nursing Home which he was scheduled to enter.

Peru head to announce decision

Peru — Peru State College President Dr. Douglas Pearson will announce his decision about a faculty vote of confidence Thursday afternoon.

Pearson called for the vote of confidence during a Monday meeting of about 40 Peru professional staff members. He said tat if the vote went against him he would offer his resignation to the state college Board of Trustees.

The vote totals have not been released and Pearson has not been available for comment.

Cozad — A $205,000 swimming pool bond issue won approval of Cozad voters in a special election here. An unofficial tally indicated 261 votes for the proposal, 114 against. The issue was placed on the ballot via petition.

Ex-Detective fined

Omaha (UPI) — A former Omaha police detective has been fined $25 for possession of marijuana.

Brian Johnson, 32, was arrested June 14 after narcotics detectives, acting on a tip, found about nine ounces of marijuana at his home. Johnson had pleaded innocent, contending the marijuana belonged to a friend.

Normal July forecast

The 30-day Nebraska weather outlook for July calls for temperatures to be near normal. Precipitation is expected to be below normal in the west to near or slightly above normal in the east.

Normal high temperatures are in the mid-80s to the mid-90s, while normal lows range mostly in the 60s. Normal precipitation is around 1 inch in the west to about 3 inches in the east.

Larsen resigns post

Hastings (AP) — Adams County criminal investigator Harold Larsen submitted his resignation from the sheriff's department Tuesday, effective July 31.

In a letter of resignation to Sheriff Robert Anderson, Larsen cited "implied and expressed internal department pressures and animosities." Larsen was referring to the controversy surrounding the ambulance service and its removal from the sheriff's department last month.

Larsen had supported the separation.

Sciences grant awarded

Omaha (AP) — The University of Nebraska at Omaha mathematics and computer sciences department has received a $20,800 grant from the National Science Foundation. It will finance a feasibility study of personalized instruction systems for teaching algebra and trigonometry, the school said.

Massive power line working

Columbus (AP) — The Nebraska Public Power District said Tuesday the state's largest electric transmission line west of Grand Island has been put into operation. The 163-mile, 345,000 volt line connects the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation substation at Grand Island with the substation near the Gerald Gentleman Power Station at Sutherland.

Free parking to end

Omaha (AP) — Mayor Al Veys decreed Wednesday that free parking at hooded meters in the downtown Omaha, South Omaha and Benson business districts will end next Tuesday.

Since March, the city has experimented with free parking at the request of businessmen. The idea was to allow free parking for two hours to insure a regular turnover.

Veys said the hoods would be removed at least temporarily to see if it makes a difference to business.

Recycling aids needy

Omaha (AP) — Recycling of newspapers by Omahans resulted Wednesday in $632 being available for the Omaha Church Pantry Program, to buy food for needy persons.

The Rev. David Holland, pantry director, said the money will feed 25 to 30 families for three days.

Contracts awarded

Wayne (AP) — The Wayne City Council has awarded a $189,923 contract for downtown improvements to the Gill Construction Co. of Jackson.

The downtown improvements include new sidewalks on 12 city blocks and some–beautification work.

Lemurs display increases

Omaha (AP) — Four ringtailed lemurs arrived in Omaha Tuesday to join the one male of the species already residing at the Henry Doorly Zoo.

Dr. Lyndsay Phillips, zoo veterinarian, said the lemurs are a link between primitives and monkeys. Natives of the Malagasy Republic, they live up to 20 years.

Liquor issue rejected

Indianola — A liquor-by-the-drink proposal was defeated by Indianola residents by eight votes. Unofficial tally was 94 against and 86 for the issue. There are no absentee ballots to be counted, officials said.

Penney's in Omaha to be razed

Omaha (AP) — The J. C. Penney Co. building in downtown Omaha, vacant since the store closed two years ago, will be torn down and the property used as a parking lot for the time being.

Thomas Moore, executive vice president in the estate and trust department of the Omaha National Bank, said demolition will begin when the wrecker completes demolition of the Hamilton Hotel.

The bank controls the property as trustee of three trust accounts, all involving descendants of the Hayden family.

The adjoining Woolworth store at 16th and Douglas Streets will remain open.

Moore said efforts through real estate firms to lease the property were unsuccessful.

Beatrice park vote is rejected

By Dean Terrill
Southeast Nebraska Bureau

Beatrice — Some three years of controversy over a 40-acre park proposal for northeast Beatrice climaxed Wednesday with a court ruling that it would be improper to hold a city election on the issue.

Gage County District Judge William Rist refused to issue a writ of mandamus forcing the election as requested by city councilman Doug Probst and other park opponents. The lawsuit had been filed against city administrative assistant Terry Doyle, who had refused to certify petitions against the project, first on a technicality and then through a contention that they contained insufficient valid signatures.

Judge Rist found that the petitions did contain more than the required 20% of registered voters for staging an election. But he ruled it would be improper to present the matter at "either a special or general election."

"The law does not intend all actions of the mayor and council to be subject to review by direct election," said the judge in a written opinion, "that process being reserved for the more basic decision of government . . ."

Rist found that 71 signatures had been improperly stricken by Doyle, including 29 signatures of women who had signed their husbands' Christian names. Along with 1,346 signatures which had been accepted, the total declared valid came to 1,417.

Chiropractor's case is in legal limbo

By J.L. Schmidt
Star Staff Writer

Dr. William Seng's future in the criminal justice system hinges on the decision of the Lancaster County District Court.

The case of the 35-year-old Lincoln chiropractor, charged with manslaughter last November in the death of a 14-year-old patient, has been in legal limbo amid pleas and briefs filed with District Court Judge William Hastings.

Seng was arraigned Nov. 8 in connection with the death of Debra Sue Schoenrock. Miss Schoenrock, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Schoenrock, died Sept. 21 of pneumonia. Following a seven-week investigation by the county attorney's office, Seng was accused of "negligence" because the girl needed medical, not chiropractic, treatment, according to County Attorney Ron Lahners.

Seng had been expected to enter the pre-trial diversion program, but was arraigned in District Court in February after officials of the program told Lahners that the chiropractor "was not going to appear for (the completion of) his screening and there was nothing else to be done," Lahners said.

Pre-trial diversion offers three months to a year of counseling for persons charged with nonviolent felonies. Charges are dropped after successful completion of the program.

Seng's attorney, John Stevens Berry, contended during the county and district court hearings that there was insufficient evidence to force his client to stand trial. Those contentions, known as a plea in abatement, are still pending before Judge Hastings.

In March, the girl's parents filed a civil suit in district court seeking recovery of $4,500 and other unspecified damages. That suit is also pending.

Monday, more than seven months after the matter came to public attention, no decisions had been made, but Berry said he isn't surprised.

"We (Berry and the county attorney's office) have filed all of our briefs on time. The judge still needs to hear our oral arguments before making his decision," Berry said.

But, "time, in matters like this, makes a good deal of sense," he added. Nebraska is a speedy state, compared to some, he said. He mentioned states where such cases take "five to seven years" before they come to trial.

Berry added, if there is a trial, "it probably won't be until this fall," almost a year after the original charges were filed.

Vitek, Bereuter debate state pen construction

Associated Press

Correctional Services Director Joseph Vitek took his arguments for a construction plan at the State Penitentiary before the Legislature's Appropriations Committee Wednesday, and renewed a long-standing debate with Sen. Doug Bereuter.

Vitek's lengthy explanation of the planning and decisions on the campus design for the new maximum security housing units left Bereuter no more impressed than during the 1977 session, when the committee rejected the building concept.

"In general, I'm uneasy about the plans," Bereuter said. "There doesn't seem to be any emphasis on inmate work when reports show inmates working as little as 20 minutes a day."

The Utica lawmaker, vice chairman of the panel, was also critical because the design would lead to relatively higher operating costs with the prisoner to guard ratio increased by 50 per cent.

Vitek responded that Bereuter was seemingly trying to find both a modern facility and the economies of the large cell block where prisoners are "herded like animals."

Attempts to find a middle ground between small unit campus atmosphere and large cell blocks were tried in the 1960s and failed, Vitek said.

The state health and safety code combined with recent federal court rulings virtually mandated the campus plan, Vitek said.

"If I were an inmate, I'm not sure I would feel safe," in the proposed housing, Bereuter said.

Safety for the public, inmates and staff are major considerations, Vitek said.

Many questions were raised at the committee meeting for Vitek to answer when he comes before the panel next month.

The committee also reviewed the plans for construction, and destruction, at the Beatrice State Home. Jack Cleavenger, director of the Department of Public Institutions, said seven obsolete buildings at Beatrice should be razed.

Those building cannot be renovated economically to meet federal requirements or national standards, Cleavenger said.

Planning is difficult, he said, because of the unsettled nature of the court case against the state by the federal government. Although the case was settled, the U.S. Justice Department has claimed the state has failed to live up to its commitments.

Guest brings 300 pounds of luggage

Omaha (AP) — Roger Clemens' work is pianos. He reconditions, restores, rebuilds or whatever has to be done, except tuning.

Clemens, 46 travels all over North America plying his craft.

For a week, Clemens has been in Omaha restoring part of the Joslyn Art Museum's Steinway Concert Grand in the Witherspoon Hall.

Clemens, a meticulous worker, brought thousands of tools with him. His baggage weighed 300 pounds.

His services were required because the action of the 1940 piano needed repair. "A piano with an inoperative action is like a race car with some of the plugs missing," Clemens said.

Clemens does not have a name for his profession. "I guess you could call me a piano technician. I suppose that's the closest."

On the road nearly all the time, Clemens said that last year he spent nine days at his home at Jerome, Ariz. "The rest of the time I was either traveling or working."

A native New Yorker, Clemens got involved with music early. At the age of 15 he performed in his first nightclub playing the trumpet. "I never dreamed I'd be anything but a musician," he said. He also studied classical piano.

He started college and then left to go into the service. After three years in the Air Force, Clemens had to decide between continuing his military specialty — physical therapy — or returning to music.

"I'm sure if I hadn't decided in favor of music," he said, "I would be practicing medicine today."

Clemens then apprenticed himself in Los Angeles, working under some of the old masters in the profession.

Then he began his cross-country junkets restoring pianos which brought him to concert halls, universities, museums and homes of the work's great piano players.

Clemens ranks the Joslyn piano near the top. "I would say it is one of the 10 best I've ever worked on. I wouldn't mind buying this one, even though I already have one. But then maybe I need two."

Two teenagers suffocate in bin

Stuart (AP) — Two teenagers were suffocated in a grain bin accident Tuesday, Holt County Sheriff Charles Fox said.

Fox identified the two as 18-year-old Keith Brown of Stuart and 14-year-old John Quigley of Norfolk.

Fox said the youths were unloading a grain bin on the west edge of town when the accident occurred.

Relatives reported them missing about 2:30 p.m. Authorities who disassembled the grain bin found their bodies, he said.

Open hearing granted in Texan's murder trial

North Platte (AP) — A Texas man accused of killing a fellow power plant worker asked for and was granted Wednesday an open hearing on his first degree murder charge.

Lincoln County Judge Earl Morgan rejected a prosecution motion that the preliminary hearing be closed, after public defender Keith Bystrom said defendant William Glenn Cochran wanted it open.

Cochran is accused of shooting Louie Bridgeman of Louisiana Friday. Cochran's two younger brothers are being held as material witnesses.

The four men, all workers at the Gerald Gentleman power plant, lived together in a tent near the Sutherland reservoir.

Before ruling that the hearing would be open, Morgan met with members of local news media, who agreed to abide by restrictions in the Nebraska Bar-Press guidelines when reporting on the hearing.

Omaha rate for sewers is going up

Omaha (UPI) — The cost of sewer service in Omaha may be going up more than originally anticipated.

City finance director George Richardson said the average residential rate could be at least $86.40. The city earlier had indicated the new fee might be $72.

Omahans currently pay an average of $57.60, according to revised figures compiled by the Finance Department.

The $72 average rate was based on a 50% increase of what city officials thought was the current average fee — $48.

Richardson commented after City Councilman Jerry Hassett urged the council to delete $4.7 million from the city's application for public works act money. The funds would be used to begin the Papillion Creek Plant.

The mayor's office and the Public Works Department contend the project is necessary, but Hassett disagreed.

He suggested using the money instead to build a giraffe house at the Henry Doorly Zoo, refurbish the vacant interim City Hall, build a maintenance garage for the Parks and Recreation Department and construct a library in Millard.

Hassett also suggested spending part of the money for an elevated walkway connecting the Hilton Hotel with a planned addition to the city auditorium and for a lighted baseball field.

Omaha mall pool water polluted

Omaha (UPI) The pool at the Central Park Mall may look inviting on a hot day, but waders risk infection and skin disease, the chief of environmental health for the Omaha-Douglas County Health Department said.

Don Olson said Wednesday tests show the water is "grossly contaiminated."

Open sores could become infected and a skin rash known as "swimmer's itch" could result from wading in the pool, he said.

A number of people attending a festival at the mall last weekend cooled off in the pool, even though a sign is posted prohibiting wading.

Prostitute is hit on head by man

Omaha (UPI) — A woman who admitted to police she was a prostitute was reported in good condition Wednesday recovering from a fractured skull after a customer beat her on the head with a wrench.

Lorelie D. Owens, 24, Council Bluffs, told police she met the man in downtown Omaha at about 11 p.m. Tuesday. Miss Owens got into the man's car and they drove to a secluded area nearby, she said.

Miss Owens also suffered cuts and bruises on the head when the man beat her on the head with a long-handled wrench.

Police reports said the man told Miss Owens he had been robbed by a prostitute a few days earlier and wanted to get even.

Wheat yields spotty to good

By Dominick Costello
Farm Editor

Wheat fields all along the southern two tiers of counties in Nebraska are swarming with combines as farmers rush the wheat crop to elevators and storage bins.

"We will have the bulk of the wheat in within two days if it doesn't rain," said Mrs Annabell Trumble, manager of the Cooperative Elevator at Eagle.

Yields at Eagle are spotty, all the way from six to 60 bushels an acre, but the average is between 25 and 30, she said. "The quality has been good with test weights from 59 to 61 pounds," Mrs. Trumble added.

At Davey the yields are running under 30 bushels with an occasional field reaching 40 bushels "It is pretty good wheat with test weights about 59 pounds and moisture below 12%, but the price is poor," said Pete Matulka, manager of the elevator at Davey

Reports from western Nebraska compiled by the State Labor Department indicate good progress is being made in that area of the state

At McCook the average yield is from 30 to 45 bushels an acre Local elevators took in 60,000 bushels, with moisture from 10% to 12.5% and test weights as high as 62 pounds.

At Benkelman the yields were from 30 to 40 bushels an acre with a test weight of 60 pounds Yields were in the 40-bushel range

At Stratton the elevator had taken in 24,000 bushels of wheat with a test weight of 60 pound Yields were in the 40-bushel range

At Lebanon the elevator had 34,000 bushels of wheat testing 12% moisture and 60 pound test weight. Yields were estimated at near 4 bushels per acre

At Danbury the elevators had taken between 40,000 to 50,000 bushels of wheat with test weights around 60 pounds.

Association forms to 'dress up' area

By Joe Hudson
Star Staff Writer

About 30 haymarket-area businessmen, artists and merchants Wednesday night formed an association aimed at promoting and revitalizing the area.

But the association stumbled on one of the first orders of business Members couldn't agree on a name for the new group

Although the association is temporarily nameless, the general goal is clear — to renovate and dress up the area in a turn-of-the-century motif, attract new businesses and lure shoppers into the area bounded roughly by 7th, 9th, M and Q Sts.

Possible projects in the area were outlined by Keith Royer, a local promotional consultant who spearheaded the group's organizational meeting. He also was chosen head of the association Wednesday.

Royer suggested installing old-style street lamps in the area and wrought-iron fencing along O St. under the Harris overpass. The fencing would replace yellow and black oil drums that line the street.

Other possibilities are a centrally located map and shop directory and cooperative advertising using a wagonwheel logo.

Royer suggested a slogan. "Haymarket — Lincoln's first marketplace, where yesteryear is making a comeback."

Some of the confusion on a name for the group stemmed from the fact that "Lincoln's first marketplace" — a farmers' market established from 9th to 10th and O to P Sts. — was a block east of today's Haymarket area

Royer also suggested that signs be put in some of the older buildings, telling patrons how the building was used in the late 1800s.

The plan would not draw shoppers away from the central business district, Royer insisted A revitalized Haymarket would complement downtown business, he said

Lincoln Center Association officials were on hand to offer advice to the new group. LCA Executive Director Lanford Jorgensen suggested the group eventually go to the city council and form a business improvement district

The cost of projects in the district would be assessed on a storefront footage basis, Jorgensen said.

Jorgensen also suggested that the group work closely with the Downtown Advisory Committee for help with possible zoning tangles and building ordinance problems.

Jorgansen agreed that "what's good for here (Haymarket) is good for the central business district."

Realtor Bill Kinsey warned that filling the area with quaint, small shops and restaurants, as is generally desired, could be difficult.

Larger manufacturing firms and warehouses enjoy low rent in the area, he said, and will not be eager to relocate.

Yeutter: Money handout no end to world hunger

There's no simple way to cure the world's food problem, a former assistant secretary of agriculture said Wednesday

Clayton Yeutter, a Lincoln attorney, spoke at the Avery Summer Lecture on world food problems at University of Nebraska-Lincoln, his alma mater.

"We can't say that if we lay out $7 to $8 billion it will end hunger," Yeutter said. "It won't happen. That's too simplistic"

Yeutter advocated economic cures for the food problems by increasing purchasing power for underdeveloped nations.

"There are people in this world who are hungry because they can't afford the food they need," Yeutter said.

He said philanthropy is no substitute for building a strong economy for a developing country.

"Philanthropy is a way to substitute for economic growth, but it's not long term," he said. "Most Americans would rather expand trade than make doles."

He said this country stands behind that edict by having trade deficits in order to buy more from developing countries.

He pointed to Taiwan and South Korea as economies which buy more from the United States than this country ever gave because of past steps to strengthen them.

Lincolnite is charged in theft of plaque from Amtrak station

An 18-year-old Lincolnite was charged Wednesday in connection with the theft of a bronze plaque from the Amtrak station, 7th and P Sts.

Michael J Watson, 631 N 68th St., was charged in Lancaster County Court with grand larceny and released on a $1,000 personal recognizance bond.

The 5-by-3-foot plaque valued at about $300, was stolen early Wednesday morning from the south entrance of the building.

Watson's preliminary hearing date is to be set July 12 Charges were pending against another 18-year-old male arrested after the theft.

Burglar's love life suspected

Tulsa Okla (AP) — There are no suspects yet in the robbery of the Good Body health food store, but the manager figures the burglar was having trouble with his love life

Manager Alan Spooner conducted an inventory to find out what was missing and came up with this list 12 cans of ginseng tea, several quarts of unsweetened papaya juice, several bottles of vitamin C, one container of cashew butter and a small amount of cash

It's weird Spooner said, especially the ginseng It's supposed to be an aphrodisiac, you know"

Car and motorcycle collide

A Lincoln man was in fair condition at Bryan Memorial Hospital early Thursday morning following a car-motorcycle collision on 33rd Street between B and A Streets. Police said Garth V. Warner, 33, of 949 S. 30th St., suffered a fractured skull and a broken collarbone when his cycle collided with a car turning left off of 33rd into a parking lot. The driver of the car, 18-year-old Michael L. Stubblefield, 1124 S. 30th, was ticketed for negligent driving.

Lincoln girl, 16, killed in Colorado

Services will be Friday for a Lincoln girl killed Tuesday in an auto accident in eastern Colorado.

Kathryn Lynn Neemann, 16, was killed when she was thrown from a car which overturned twice after skidding broadside on a county road near Punkin Center, Colo., the Colorado Patrol reported

Injured in the accident was another Lincoln girl, Teri Langston, 16 She was being treated at Colorado Springs Community Hospital for a concussion and a broken shoulder.

The patrol said it was not clear which girl was driving. The girls were the only occupants of the car.

Miss Neemann, a Lincoln High School student and a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Neemann, 1441 S. 7th St., a twin brother, Mark, and a brother, Karl.

The funeral will be at 2:30 p.m Friday at Hodgman-Splain-Roberts Mortuary, 4040 A St. Burial will be at Lincoln Memorial Park.

Short work made of fire

Corrections officers made short work of a fire in a cell at the city jail Wednesday morning.

An unidentified inmate set two towels, a blanket and a rubber mattress on fire but jail workers extinguished the blaze with a fire extinguisher before firemen arrived.

Exhaust fans were used to remove smoke from the cellblock and no prisoners had to be evacuated, police said.

Four companies escape taxes, halt sought

Washington (AP) — President Carter has been asked to spike federal rulings that have enabled four giant U.S. oil companies to escape paying taxes on income from their oil operations in Saudi Arabia.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said the U.S. Treasury has lost more than $300 million a year as a result of Internal Revenue Service rulings that allow the firms to treat payments to the Saudi government as foreign income taxes.

Grain storage costs incorrect

Under the Public Service Commission's new maximum charges for grain storage, a farmer could pay up to $2.85 to store 100 bushels of grain and $3.45 for 100 bushels of soybeans.

In a story in Wednesday morning's Star, these figures were incorrectly reported as applying to 1,000 bushels.

Dollar vs. yen causes Honda price increase

Detroit (AP) — American Honda Motor Co. is raising U.S. car prices for the second time in as many months because of another drop in the value of the U.S. dollar against the Japanese yen.

The latest price increase will average 4%, or $148 per car.

State's TB rate lowest

United Press International

Because Nebraska has good tuberculosis control, the state in 1976 had the lowest TB rate in the country, Dr. Paul Stoesz, Lincoln, said Wednesday.

"The Legislature enacted a darn good law that permitted the setting up of an excellent program," said Stoesz, director of disease control for the Nebraska Health Department.

With only 58 cases of tuberculosis reported in Nebraska during 1976, Nebraska had the lowest TB rate among the 50 states for the third straight year.

The Nebraska rate was 3.7 cases per 100,000 population, compared to the national rate of 15 per 100,000.

The rate in Nebraska was up last year from the 40 cases reported in 1975, but Stoesz said the increase resulted from stepped up efforts to find and control new cases.

Through the first half of this year, the rate was down approximately 30%, with 20 cases reported compared to 28 during the same period in 1976.

"It looks as if the increased effort last year paid off. We got them treated and that means there are that many fewer cases this year," Stoesz said.

The law also permits the state to pay the cost of medical care for persons with TB who can not afford treatment. "That means the whole bill will be paid, so there is no reason for anyone not to get treated," he said.

"Most tuberculosis is from people who are in a real stricken poverty situation. This is where human health seems to break down," he said.

The state's scattered population also has a lot to do with the low rate.

"We don't have crowding in the metropolitan areas of Lincoln and Omaha, and even there we don't have the bad ghetto areas like other major population centers," Stoesz said.

Medical service grants less than expected

A State Health Department spokesman Wednesday said the recently apprpved federal grants for emergency medical services are significantly less than expected.

Dick Meyer, director of the department's Division of Emergency Health Systems, said the U.S. Public Health Service's grant for two new regional emergency health service systems was more than $600,000 less than the amount requested.

The two new systems, one in Lincoln and the other in Norfolk, each had requested $500,000 to begin operations, Meyer said. The federal grant announced Tuesday totaled $375,000 for both facilities.

In addition, a $500,000 grant was approved for the Panhandle emergency medical system and Omaha's Midlands system for emergency systems improvements.

Meyer said grants for each of the six regional systems have averaged about $375,000 annually over the past few years. He also said the new emergency systems may have to sacrifice some ambulances and communications equipment because of the cut in federal funds.

Extradition next for bus hijacker

Fremont (AP) — A Ypsilanti, Mich., mental hospital escapee is awaiting extradition to Michigan in the Dodge County jail after he forced a Greyhound Bus driver to take him to the Fremont Airport early Tuesday.

Authorities said Jeffrey Ackles, 22, Flint, Mich., claimed to have a gun and asked Omaha bus driver Elwyn Mappes if he wanted to die.

When Mappes replied "no," Ackles told him to stop at the airport. Ackles told the bus driver and airport manager Paul Simms that he had a gun in his pocket.

At the airport Fremont police and Dodge County sheriff's deputies surrounded Ackles. When Ackles refused to remove his hands from his pocket or to lie down, Fremont Police Chief Fred Whitt grabbed him and held him while officers handcuffed him. No gun was found on Ackles when he was searched.
